

Hampton Court, Middlesex.

THE Antiquities
OF ENGLAND
AND Wales.

By Francis Grose Esq^r. F. A. S.

VOL. III. New Edition.

*Just thus in Woods and solitary Caves
The Ancient Hermits liv'd but they liv'd happy.
And in their Quiet contemplations found
More real comforts, than Societys
Of Men could yeild, than Citys could Afford.
Or all the Lustres that a Court could give.
Mays via couple.*

LONDON. Printed for S. HODGKIN, N^o 212, HIGH STREET.

THE LIBRARY
SANT PAUL.

K E N T

IS a maritime county, at the S. E. extremity of the island, and the nearest the coasts of Flanders and Holland, from whence it is divided by the Straits of Dover. Before the arrival of the Romans, it comprized the principality of the Cantii, and after their arrival it was included in their province of Britannia Prima. During the Saxon Heptarchy this county was an entire kingdom by itself, and the Saxon kings kept their court at Canterbury, which now has an Archbishop, who is the Primate of all England. This sovereignty, the first established during the Heptarchy, began in 454, and ended in 823, having had 17 kings. It is in the diocese of Canterbury and Rochester, and province of Canterbury, and in the Home Circuit. It is bounded on the north by the Thames, Essex, and the German Ocean; south by Sussex and Straits of Dover; east by the Downs and the German Ocean; and west by Surry. Its form is oblong, containing 1,248,000 square acres, or 1550 square miles, being 56 miles long from east to west, 30 broad from north to south, and about 166 in circumference; has 250,000 inhabitants, 39,245 houses; is divided into five lathes, that are subdivided into 62 hundreds, with 418 parishes, 163 vicarages, 1173 villages, two cities, viz. Canterbury and Rochester; 32 market towns, viz. Maidstone, (the county town) Chatham, Woolwich, Deal, Tunbridge, Gravesend, Milton, Fordwich, Feverham, Folkstone, Aylesford, Appledore, Dartford, Ashford, Dover, Queenborough, Bromley, Cranbrook, Eltham, Goudhurst, Lenham, Lidd, Malling, Sevenoaks, Smarden, Tenterden, Westram, Wrotham, Wye, Greenwich, Deptford, Sittingbourn; Margate, Ramsgate, Northfleet, Eleham, and the Cinque Ports of Dover, Sandwich, Romney, and Hythe. It sends 18 Members to Parliament, pays 22 parts of the land-tax, and provides 960 of the national militia. Its rivers are the Thames, Medway, Stour, Rother, Darent, Tun, Cray, Wantsum, Cockmare, Teise, Beule, Len, and Newhaven. The most noted isles, rocks, &c. are S. and N. Foreland, Dungeness, Oxney, Thanet, and Sheepy Isles; Isle of Grain, the Downs,

K E N T.

Downs, Goodwin Ssds, Sheerneys Fort, Deal and Dover Castles; St. Margaret, Hope and Hythe Bays; East Swale, Straits of Dover, Blythe Sand; Sandown, Walmer and Sandgate Castles; Dover and North Foreland Light-houses. Its product is cattle, sheep, wild fowl, iron mines, corn, carrots, hops, wood, cherries, and all other fine fruits; excellent fish, oysters, lime-chalk, timber, sand for glass, &c. The most remarkable hills, &c. are Shooter's Hill, Mount Sion, Mount Ephraim, Idle Hill, Camphurst and Randall Woods, Blackheath, Greenwich Park, Romney Marsh, Weald of Kent, &c. The principal dock-yards are at Woolwich and Deptford, and the arsenal for shipping at Chatham; Greenwich Hospital, the most magnificent charity for decayed seamen, and Morden College for reduced merchants. It is on account of its soil divided into three parts. 1. The Downs, enjoying health without riches. 2. The marshy places, where are riches without health. 3. The inland part, where are enjoyed both riches and health. The mineral waters at Tunbridge.

THE Roman, Saxon, or Danish encampments are near Canterbury, at Kelfton, three miles south of Bromley; near Hythe, upon Holwood Hill, near Farnborough; and a Roman amphitheatre, near Sandwich. The Roman Roads in this county took their route from Dover, where there now remains part of their Pharos or watch-tower. They had a considerable port called Portus Ritupis, agreed to be near Sandwich or Stonar, but now swallowed up by the sea. Richborough Castle is said to have been a second Pharos, or Lapis Tituli; from whence about five miles is Portus Dubris, now Dover. From Lemanis, now Lyme, near Hythe, a third military way goes to Canterbury, which by the Saxons was called Stone Street. Durovernum, now Canterbury, is the place where the three roads met, and made one towards London. From Canterbury it proceeded to Durolevum, now Ashford; thence to Durobrovis, now Maidstone; thence to Vagniacis, now Rochester; and onward to Noviomagus, now Holwood Hill; and so on to London.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

Allington Castle near Maidstone	Malling Abbey
St. Augustine's Abbey at Canterbury	St. Margaret's Abbey near South Darent
Aynsford Castle and Chapel	St. Martin's Church
Barfeton Church near Barham Downs	St. Martin's Priory } at Canterbury
Barnard Castle near Milton	St. Mary's Church
St. Bartholomew's Hospital at Hythe	Minster Monastery in the Isle of Sheppey
Bellfrank's Palace near Beakbourne	Mote's Bulwark, and Mereworth Castle
Boxley Abbey	Oxford Castle
Canterbury Cathedral. Great Hall of the Archbishop's Palace. Arches in the Wall, Canterbury	St. Pancras Chapel, in St. Augustine's Monastery, Canterbury
Castle Rust near Milton	Paveington Chapel near Pluckley
Chilham Castle	Queenborough Castle
Chiding Stone	St. Radigune's Abbey near Dover
Christchurch Monastery at Canterbury	Reculver Abbey near Margate
Cowling Castle near Rochester	Richborough Castle near Sandwich
Dartford Priory	Rochester Castle, Hospital, Cathedral and Bridge
Dane Chapel in the Isle of Thanet	Romney Castle
Davington Priory near Feverham	Royton Chapel near Lenham
Deal Castle	Saltwood Castle near Hythe
Dover Castle: Tower in it: and old Church	Sandgate Castle near Folkstone
East Bridge Hospital in Canterbury	Sandown Castle near Deal
Eltham Palace	Shelve Chapel near Pluckley
Feverham Abbey	Shoreham Castle
Gundolph's Tower, Rochester	Starborough Castle near Edenridge
Hackington Church at Canterbury	Stone Castle near Greenhithe
Halling House	Temple or Mansion of Knights Templars at Stroud
Hever Castle and Church near Tunbridge	Tenterden Church
Howlet Palace near Littlebourn	Tunbridge Castle and Priory
Kits Coty House 4 miles from Maidstone	Ulcomb Church near Lenham
Leeds Castle and Abbey	Upnor Castle near Chatham
Lefnes Abbey near Plumstead	Walmer Castle and Priory near Deal
Leybourne Castle	Westen or Osten Hanger House, near Hythe
Lullingston Castle	West Gate, Canterbury
Lyme Castle 4 miles W. of Hythe	Wincheap Gate, Canterbury
Maidstone Palace, College, Church, &c.	Wood Church in the Isle of Thanet
Maison Dieu at Dover	Wrotham Church

Sparrow, Sc.

Allington Castle, Kent.

Pub. by J. & W. Hatch, 1844, by S. Sparrow.

T H E
A N T I Q U I T I E S
O F
E N G L A N D and W A L E S.

ALLINGTON CASTLE, KENT.

THIS castle stands on the western banks of the river Medway, about a mile north of Maidstone. Of it, Harris and Haisted in their Histories of Kent, give the following account :

THIS was a castle of note in the Saxons time, and was called the castle of Medway. It was razed to the ground by the Danes, when they ravaged these parts; but after the Conquest, it was rebuilt again by Earl Warren; and from him went to the Lord Fitz Hughes; and, by his daughter and heir, to Sir Giles Allington, from whom both it and the parish took their name. But Philipot, from Darell and Mr. Marsh saith, that this castle was erected by William de Columbariis, or Columbers, perhaps in King Stephen's time.

AND Darell saith further, that in the 8th of King Henry III. when, as appears by the Tower records, there was an exact survey taken of all the castles in England, and the names of such returned as were either the governors or proprietors of them; one of this family was found to be possessor of this castle, and lord of the manor annexed to it; but about the end of that reign, it came into the possession of Sir Stephen de Pencheſter, who had it, by purchase, I suppose, from one Osbert, as appears by the Tower records: he was afterwards Lord-warden of the Cinque ports; and married Margaret, daughter of the famous Hubert de Burgo, earl of Kent. If this castle was ever designed for a place of strength after the Conquest, it must have been, as is above hinted, in King Stephen's time, or thereabouts; and probably it was afterwards razed and dismantled: for it appears, saith Philipot, by the patent-rolls, in the 9th of King Edward I. that a licence was then granted to him to build a castle here, and to fortify and embattle; which, when it was done, denominated it, Allington Pencheſter. He built a fine tower here, which was called Solomon's Tower; and he had also from the same prince, a charter of free-warren; the grant of a market on Tuesdays, and of a three days fair at the festival of St. Laurence: But he deceaſing without iſſue-male, by one of his daughters it went into the poſſeſſion of Stephen de Cobham, and continued for many deſcents in that eminent family: and in the beginning of King Edward the Fourth's reign, it was become the eſtate of the Brents; but ſtaid not long there before it was ſold to Sir Henry Wiat, privy-counſellor to that king, who erected a handſome manſion adjoining to the caſtle; but his unfortunate grandſon, Sir Thomas Wiat, forfeited it to the crown in the 2d of Queen Mary's reign, together with his life. It ſtaid here but a little while before Queen Elizabeth granted it to John Aſtley, Eſq. maſter of the Jewel-office; whoſe iſſue-male dying before him, he bequeathed this caſtle, manor, and the advowſon of the church, with his other eſtates in this neighbourhood, to his kinsman Sir Jacob Aſtley, Knt. afterwards for his bravery and good conduct, created by King Charles I. Baron Aſtley of Reading; his grandſon dying without iſſue, they devolved to Sir Jacob Aſtley of Melton, conſtable in co. Norfolk, who ſold them anno 1720 to Sir Robert Marſham, Bart. whoſe ſon the Right Hon. Robert Lord Romney, is the preſent poſſeſſor.

HARRIS, from Selden and Daniel, adds the following particular concerning this kind of caſtles:

IN the year 1760, when this view was taken, the caſtle was in a very decayed ſtate, the towers converted to a habitation, and uſued

as Great Hall of the Archbishop's Palace, Canterbury.

Engraved by J. Hopper.

as offices to a farm house; which Mr. Haisted supposes to have been built out of the ruins of the mansion erected by Sir Henry Wiat. There was formerly a park adjoining to the castle, which was disparked soon after his attainder and forfeiture thereof.

ABOUT the middle of King Stephen's reign, saith the former, castles were erected in almost all parts of the kingdom, by the several contending parties; and each owner of a castle was a kind of petty prince, coining his own money, and exercising sovereign jurisdiction over his people. And Daniel saith, that there were one thousand one hundred and seventeen castles built in England in his reign; King Stephen giving leave to every one almost, to embattle, &c. But in the agreement between him and the Duke Henry, afterwards King Henry II. they were all ordered to be demolished. This agreement was made at Winchester, anno Domini 1154.

THE GREAT HALL OF THE ARCHBISHOP'S PALACE, CANTERBURY.

THE buildings seen in this view all belonged to the archbishop's palace. The square tower was the porch of the great hall, and is now converted into a dwelling house; the arch of the entrance, though filled up with windows, is still apparent on the shady side of the tower.

THIS hall, it is recorded, was built by Archbishop Langton: the expences of its erection, together with those of the feasting, &c. at the translation of St. Thomas Becket, laid a very heavy debt on the see, which was not cleared till the time of archbishop Boniface, the fourth in succession from Langton. The sum was twenty-two thousand marks.

THE payment of the debt, according to Somner, drew from Boniface the following reflection: "My predecessors built this hall at great expences; they did well indeed; but they laid out no money about this building, except what they borrowed; I seem, seem, indeed, to be truly the builder of this hall, because I paid their debts."

ANNO 1559, Archbishop Parker, at his consecration, found his palace here in a very ruinous state, the great hall in particular, partly occasioned by fire, and partly for want of the necessary repairs; he therefore, in the years 1560 and 1561, thoroughly restored the whole, expending thereon 1406l. 15s. 4d. In the year 1573, he here entertained Queen Elizabeth and her whole court.

THIS hall was a right-angled parallelogram, its north and south sides measuring eighty-three, its east and west sixty-eight feet. It is now a garden, the roof, and even some of the bounding walls, being demolished; that on the east side is still standing, wherein are two Gothic canopies of Suffex marble, supported by pillars of the same, probably designed for beaufets or side-boards, the tops of which growing ruinous, have been in part taken down.

ALONG this side runs a terrace, raised on fragments of marble pillars, piled one upon the other, like billets on a wood-stack; the ends of them appeared till within a few years, when a tenant, disliking their appearance, laid a slope of green turf against them. The height of this terrace is about three feet, its breadth nearly nine: these pillars probably were ornaments to the hall and palace, pulled down and demolished amongst the other depredations committed by the Puritans at this place.

THE north wall, now standing, is modern, seemingly constructed out of the materials of the hall, in order to enlarge the garden; the traces of the original north wall are still visible. The porch is only a square of seventeen feet.—This view was drawn anno 1769.

Arches in the Wall of the City of Canterbury Kent.

Pub. 21 May 1764 by S. Hooper.

ARCHES IN THE WALL OF THE CITY OF CANTERBURY.

IN this view are depicted the arches made in the north part of the city wall for the passage of that branch of the river Stour, which makes the west part of Canterbury an island, formerly called Binnewith.

THEIR construction was pretty singular, being turned on flat slabs, on which rested the stones set on edge, from whence the inside facing of the wall was carried up. To prevent the entrance of an enemy, they were portcullised, and flanked by two square towers, one of which is seen in the view. These are probably older than the wall between them. Some years ago, a way led from North-gate to West-gate, over the wall and these arches; a great convenience to the neighbourhood of these gates in point of nearness, and to the town in general when floods happened, as this was the only way of passing dry-shod from one part of it to the other. But this is now lost; neglect of the necessary repairs, and the ruin of the parapet having made the way unpleasant, if not dangerous; so that about the year 1763, barricades were built to stop the passage; and in 1769, when an addition was made to the breadth of King's Bridge, in the High Street, these arches were ordered to be pulled down, as what might help toward that work; they were demolished accordingly, and the materials they furnished proved the most costly of any made use of on that occasion.

MR. SOMNER does not fix the age of this part of the city wall, which is of a structure very different from what joins to it; but tells us, that in the time of King Henry IV. which was after Archbishop Sudbury had rebuilt Westgate and the long wall, the whole city was taxed for the repair of its walls: that in 1401, Thomas Ickham, alderman of Burgate, for forming an estimate of the expence, made a survey of the whole; by which it appears, that in this part was a vacancy of eighteen perches and a half.

This probably was made good in that grand repair; towards the sustaining of which charge, both for the present and future, that king encouraged the citizens by the following grant, under the Privy Seal, translated and printed by Somner:

“HENRY, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, to all people to whom these present letters shall come, greeting; Know ye that here our well beloved the citizens of our city of Canterbury (as we hear) have begun to fortifie and strengthen the same city, as well with one wall of stone as with a ditch; we, considering the same city to be set near unto the sea, and to be as a port or entry of all strangers into our realm of England, coming by the same ports, so that it hath need of the more strength, of our especial grace, and for the honour of God, and by the assent of our council, have granted and given licence to the same citizens, that they may purchase lands and tenements to the value of 20l. by the year, within the said city, to have and to hold, to them and their successors, citizens of the aforesaid city, in help towards the building and making of the same wall and ditch for ever; the stat. made of lands and tenements not to be put to mortmain, or for that the said city is holden of us in burgage notwithstanding. Provided, that by inquisitions thereof, in due form to be made, and into the chancery of us or of our heirs duly to be returned, it be found that it may be done without hurt or prejudice to us or to our heirs aforesaid, or to any other. And moreover, in consideration of the premises, of our most special grace, we, by the assent of our said council, have granted and given licence to the foresaid citizens, that they all lands and places voyde and waste within the aforesaid city may dresse up, arrent, and build up. And the same lands and places so dressed up, arrented, and builded, they may have and hold to them, and to their successors aforesaid, in help and relief of the same citizens, and in maintainance of the premises and other charges, to the same city hapning for ever, without let of us or our heire, or ministers, whatsoever they be, the stat. aforesaid, or for that the said city is holden of us in burgage, as it is above said, notwith-

Pub. by J. H. & J. H. Cooper.

St. Augustine's Monastery, Kent. Pl. 1.

R. B. Gaffney Sculp.

notwithstanding. - Saved alwayes to us and to our heire, the services thereof due and accustomed. In witness whereof, we have caused these our letters patent to be made, witnesse our self at Westminster, the 5th day of May, in the 4th year of our reign."

NOTWITHSTANDING the above grant, it is greatly to be lamented that this is not the only part in these walls where demolition has been substituted for repair; infomuch that there is great room to apprehend, unless better management takes place, in a short time no traces will remain of the ancient magnificence of this city, except one may reckon as such the mace and sword, insignia of that obstacle to industry, a corporation.—This view was drawn anno 1775.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S MONASTERY. (PLATE I.)

ST. AUGUSTINE having converted King Ethelbert from paganism to the Christian faith obtained of him, both permission and lands for the erection of a monastery, which was also to be the future burial place of the kings of Kent, and archbishops of Canterbury.

FOR this purpose, Ethelbert granted him his palace, which stood on the east side of the city of Canterbury, and just without the walls; it being prohibited by the law of the twelve tables to bury in cities.

HERE St. Augustine founded his monastery, in the year 605. It was at first dedicated to the Apostles Peter and Paul; but Archbishop Dunstan, anno 987, added St. Augustine, by whose name it has been since commonly called.

A VARIETY of benefactors, royal, noble, and private, seem to have vied with each other in enriching it with lands, privileges, and immunities: of the first, it possessed nine thousand eight hundred and sixty-two acres; and amongst the latter were exemptions from toll and sheriff's-turn; the right of the aldermanry of Westgate, Infangenthef, or the power of judging any thief thief taken with their jurisdiction; and, for a long time, mintage, or the liberty of coining.

It likewise retained for about one hundred years, that is, till the days of Archbishop Brightwald, the exclusive right of being the cemetery for the kings, and, till the time of Cuthbert, that of the archbishops; this, besides the honour, was attended with many solid advantages.

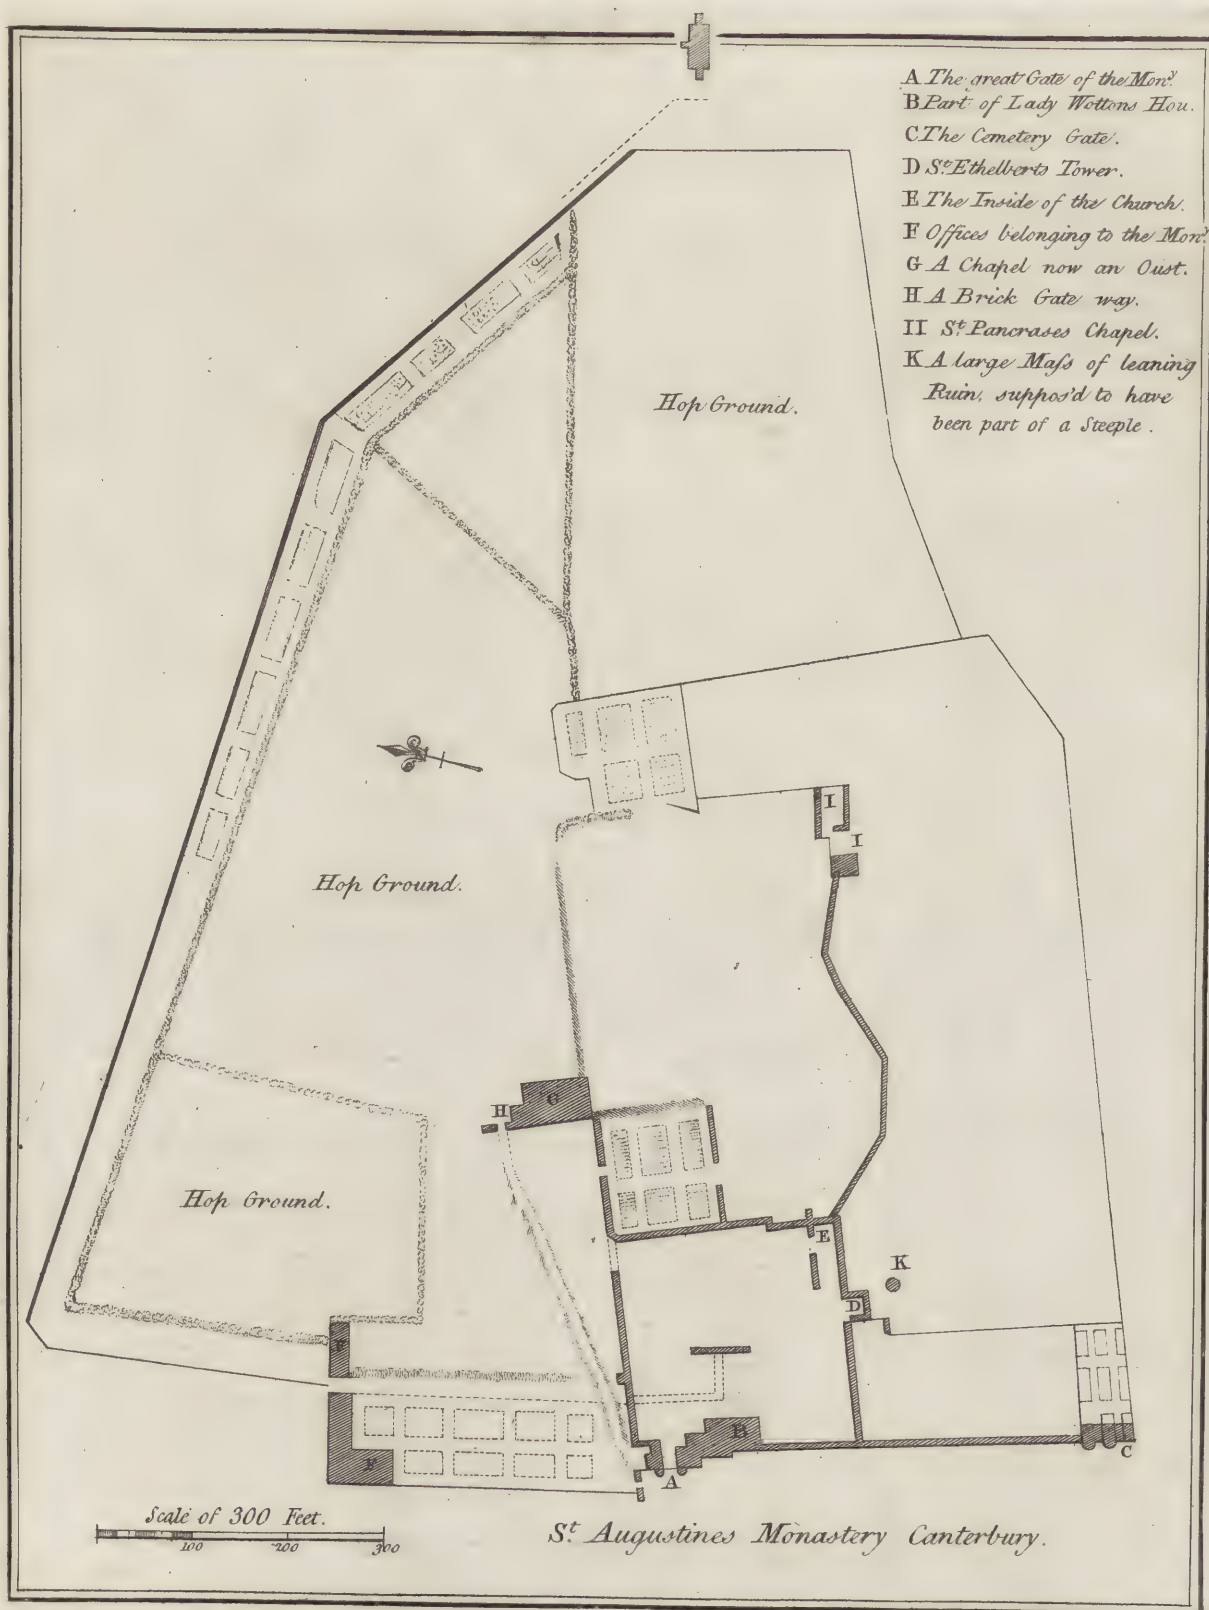

In that period were buried there, the Kings Ethelbert, Eadbald, Ercombert, Lothair, Edelbert, Mulus, and Withred; the Archbishops Augustine, Lawrence, Mellitus, Justus, Honorius, and A Deo Datus. In the year 1063, Pope Alexander II. raised it to the dignity of a mitred abbey; by this, their abbot had the title of lord; was exempted from the authority of his diocesan; had episcopal jurisdiction in his own monastery, a seat in the upper house of parliament, and at general councils was placed next the abbot of Mount Cassini: in fine, such were the riches and power of this house, that they frequently and successfully opposed the authority of the archbishop.

Their prosperity was not however without alloy; but was interrupted at different times by severe misfortunes. In 1011, they were plundered by the Danes; in 1168, their church was almost destroyed by fire; and in 1271, this monastery was nearly ruined by floods, occasioned by a prodigious storm.

The buildings of this house were erected by different persons, and at different times. Ethelbert's tower was built by Archbishop Eadfin; a church built by Eadbalden, was taken down by Abbot Scotland, who began one much more magnificent, which was finished about the year 1099, by his successor Wido; the dormitory and chapter-house were erected by Hugo Florie, a Norman, related to King William Rufus; and the cemetery gate, by Thomas Ickham, a monk, and sacrist of this monastery.

At the resignation, 31st July, 30 Henry VIII. it was valued at 1412l. 4s. 7d. the deed was signed by John Effex, the lord-abbot, and thirty out of sixty monks, which number was the establishment of the house.

FROM

St. Augustine's Monastery, Kent.
Pub. 31 May 1764 by J. Hooper.

FROM the dissolution to the end of the reign of Edward VI. it remained in the possession of the Crown, and was repaired by the board of works; this probably procured it the appellation of the palace, a title it retains to this day.

IN the year 1612, the back part of the building, adjoining to the great gate, was repaired with brick, as appears by a stone bearing that date placed over a stack of chimnies. At this place, it is said, King Charles I. consummated his marriage with the Princess Henrietta of France, anno 1625; at which time it was the mansion of the Lord Wotton, of Boston Malherbe. His lady, who survived him, died here about the year 1659. Tradition says, the postern in the city wall, opposite this monastery, was made in order to shorten her way to the cathedral; the space before the house is still called Lady Wotton's Green.

IN 1758, when this view was taken, the greatest part of the monastery belonged to Sir Edward Hales, Bart.

(PLATE II.)

IN this plate is shewn the remains of the monastery, as they appear when viewed from the easternmost part of the inclosure. The tower here seen is called Ethelbert's Tower, which appellation it is supposed to have obtained from a bell of that name formerly hanging therein. Here likewise is seen the east window of the conventual church; some of the ornaments of this window were remaining about ten years ago. Near it, and over the wall, appears a tower of the cathedral.

To the left of Ethelbert's tower is a large inclining mass, or shapeless lump of stones; this is conjectured to have been part of a tower. Beyond it, in the distance, rise the square tower of St. Paul's church, the cemetery gate of the monastery, and the circular tower and spire of St. George's church. Great part of the exterior walls of this monastery are still standing. They enclose a very considerable area, in which are many parts of buildings, evidently erected at very different periods. The whole close is likewise full of foundations, which clearly shew it was once covered with buildings.

THESE venerable remains have suffered almost as much from the depredations of its different owners and occupiers, as from the ravages of time. It is at present let for a public house. The ruins of the church have been converted into a tennis-court; the great gate into a cock-pit; and in 1765, workmen were set to pull down the tower for the sake of the materials; they accordingly began at the top; but time having rendered the cement almost as hard as the stone, the workmen proceeded so slowly as to make the price of their labour exceed the value of the stones taken down; wherefore it was thought proper to desist. At the same time other workmen were employed about the foundations of the fallen buildings; when many pillars, capitals, and ornaments were discovered buried together in a heap; as also divers stone coffins, in which pieces of woollen garments and hair were found: but this subterranean work answering no better than that commenced aloft, the holes digged were filled up, and the ground levelled. Some, indeed, attribute the relinquishing of this undertaking to the interposition of persons abroad, who represented to the proprietor the barbarism of destroying so venerable a ruin, and the indecency of disturbing the bones of the dead, which was undoubtedly done without his knowledge.

THE site of this monastery was granted, 2d and 3d Phil. and Mary, to Cardinal Pole for life, and afterwards to Henry Lord Cobham, who was attainted the 1st of James I. 1603, when the said premises were again granted to Robert Lord Cecil of Essington, Viscount Cranbourn, in fee, by letters patent dated 27th of March, 3d of James I. with diverse remainders, at the rent of 20l. 13s. 4d. per ann. They were soon afterwards in the possession of Thomas Wotton, Lord Wotton of Morley, whose widow Mary made this place her residence, as has before been observed. In the civil wars she was cruelly plundered by the parliamentary forces. Since her time it has retained the name of Lady Wotton's Palace.

LORD

Matth. Sc.

Bradfole Abbey, Kent.

J. H. P. del. W. J. H. sculp.

LORD Wotton left four daughters and coheireffes ; the youngest of them, Anne, married Sir Edward Hales of Woodchurch, in Kent, Baronet, who brought her husband this estate ; and in their descendants it has continued down to Sir Edward Hales of St. Stephen's, alias Hackington, the present possessor.—This drawing was made anno 1759.

BROADSOALE, OR ST. RADIGUND'S ABBEY.

THIS abbey stands upon a hill, about two miles north-west of Dover. It derives the name of Broadsoale from its vicinity to a broad foal, or pond ; foal, in the Kentish dialect, signifying a pond. Its founder is not positively ascertained : Tanner says, "it was an abbey of the Præmonstratensian order, founded anno Domini, 1191, by Richard I. or Jeffery earl of Perch, and Maud his wife, the parents of Henry de Wengham, or some other charitable and pious persons, and commended to the patronage of St. Mary and St. Radigund: there seems to have been a design of translating this abbey to the neighbouring church of Ryvere, 9 John, but it did not succeed.

THE revenues of this monastery were returned into the Exchequer, 26 Henry VIII. at 98l. 9s. 2d. per ann. Dugdale ; 142l. 8s. 9d. Speed ; and after the dissolution it was granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors, in exchange for some of the old estates of the archbishop.

THE foundation of this abbey has by some been attributed to Hugo, the first abbot of St. Augustine's of that name, surnamed Florie, a Norman, and related to William Rufus ; but that could not be, if the date of the foundation is right, as this Hugo died, (according to Batteley's List of Abbots of St. Augustine,) in the year 1124. Dugdale says nothing of this abbey being dedicated to St. Mary, but mentions only St. Radigund, of whom the Legends give the following account.

ST. RADIGUND was the daughter of Berthier king of Thuringia ; she was taken prisoner when very young, and falling to the share of Clotharius I. king of France, he caused her to be carefully educated at Ath, and afterwards married her: she was a princess of great beauty, but of greater virtue, being continually occupied in works of charity and devotion; and such was her ingenuity in counteracting the luxury of a palace, that she constantly wore a hair shift next her skin. Six years after her marriage she privately withdrew from court, and at Noïon caused the veil to be given her by St. Medard. She retired into a religious house at Poitiers; the king her husband being irritated at her flight, would have forced her from her retreat, but was happily dissuaded by St. Germain, bishop of Paris; she fixed her residence at Poitiers, and built the abbey of the Holy Cross.
the

THE humility she shewed on all occasions, is almost incredible; the care of lepers and persons afflicted with the most nauseous distempers, constituted her greatest pleasures; and among other mortifications she totally abstained not only from flesh, but even from fish, eggs and fruit; at length after suffering a kind of continual martyrdom, she died in peace, in the year 587. Her anniversary is the 13th of August.

IN a MS. visitation of the Præmonstratensian order in England, preserved in the library of Thomas Astle, Esq. it is recorded that in the year 1500, the visitors found this monastery in a very ruinous state, and deficient as to the number of monks. The abbot whose name was Newton, is accused of being the cause of these deficiencies, by expending the income of his abbey on women and wine; he not only being guilty of incontinency with a variety of women, introduced by him into his chamber in the monastery, but also frequenting taverns and other places of entertainment on Sundays and holidays, where, it is added, he used to offend all companies by his wanton and unseem discourse.

AMONG those who give the foundation to one of the name of Hugh, is the author of the Villare Cantianum, who, page 78, says, the abbey of St. Radagund was founded by Hugh, the first abbot, who was before a monk of the priory of Christ Church, in the reign of King Stephen; their rule was derived from Austin, bishop

bishop of Hippo; their habit black, whence they are sometimes styled black canons and sometimes canons of St. Austin. Queen Elizabeth granted it to Simon Edolph, Esq. descended from the Edolphs of Romney Marsh, where they were very ancient; in whose successor Sir —— Edolph, the property of this place is still resident.

IN the north chancel of the church of Alkham on a flat stone, is a coat ermine on a bend sable, three cinq foiles argent; underneath is this inscription in capital letters: Here lieth buried the body of Sir Thomas Edolph, of St. Radigunds, in the parish of Polton, Knt. who departed this mortal life the —— day of —— anno Domini, 16—— Ætatis suæ ——.”

LAMBERT in his Perambulation, page 163, says, the monasterie of white channons of St. Radigundes on the hill, little more than two miles off (Dover,) valued at three-score and eighteen pounds by year, and founded by one Hugh the first abbot there.

PHILIPOT is probably mistaken as to the founder, for the reasons given by Tanner, and certainly so, as to the order and dress of the religious. Nor was it common, if practicable, for a monk of one order, to become abbot of another. The monks of Christ Church were Benedictines, cloathed in black. The habits of the Præmonstratensians white, and they were besides considered as a stricter order than the Benedictines. Since the publication of the first edition, the following particulars respecting this abbey was communicated by a neighbouring clergyman.

“This parish consists of St. Radigunds, Polton Farm, and one cottage: the inhabitants keep their poor, but pay no church.

“THE pastures of St. Radigunds abound with high bushes, which the farmer says, cover abundance of ruins. There is a tradition that more than three hundred families have lived on this spot.

“THE farmer pointed to some walls enclosing a small place, where it has been said criminals were starved to death. In the parlour of the farm-house, on taking up part of the floor, there appeared to be subterraneous passages, which are said to lead to some considerable distance. Some years ago a former tenant was bribed by strangers to suffer workmen to dig under his parlour, in search of a golden image and other treasure; but the workmen have assured the present tenant, that no such treasure was found: there are no ancient dates or inscriptions. Part of the dwelling house has been lately pulled down."

THE gates and outer walls, with many scattered pieces of ruins were remaining in 1761, when this view was taken; part of them are patched up into a farm-house, as here represented.

CANTERBURY CASTLE.

IN this view is shewn the ruins of the castle of Canterbury, the ancient arch of Worth Gate, and part of the house wherein the justices hold the quarter-sessions for the eastern division of the county.

THOUGH the exact time when this castle was built is not known, it seems agreed on all hands, to have been raised about the æra of the Conquest. It is said by some writers, here was a fort or castle in the time of Rudhudibras, or Ludhudibras, who, according to Stowe, lived eight hundred and thirty-six years before Christ, and founded the city of Canterbury. Others, among whom is Kilburne, ascribe the first erection of a castle on this spot, to Julius Cæsar; by whose command (he says) one was here constructed, according to the Roman order; which, afterwards, Hengist, king of Kent, committed to the government of Lodias, a Saxon, who residing therein a long time, it obtained the name of Lodia's Castle; by which appellation, it was excepted by Ethelbert out of the grant of lands he made to St. Augustine, for the foundation of his monastery. He adds, that it was razed by the Danes when they took and burned this city, and continued in ruins till the Conquest, when William erected the present edifice on the ancient foundations, named it the New Castle, and put therein a garrison of seven hundred men.

CAMDEN,

Ellis sc.

Canterbury Castle, Kent.

Pub. 5, July, 1784, by S. Hooper.

0 100 200 400 600 feet

Canterbury Castle.

- A The Castle.
- BBB Sheds & Outposts built against the Castle Walls.
- CC Parts of the outer Walls of the Castle.
- D The Sefion House for the County.
- E The Roman Arch.
- F The Town Ditch.
- G A Mount of Earth called the Dungeon.
- H Wincheap Gate.

CAMDEN, from his manner of expressing himself, seems to consider its foundation as about, though rather later than this period. His words are: "As to the castle which appears on the south side of the city, with its decayed bulwarks, since it does not seem of any great antiquity, I have nothing memorable to say of it, only that it was built by the Normans."

SOMNER, with great probability, places the date of its fabrication between the Danish massacre, in the year 1011, and the Conquest. That it was not in being when the Danes took the city, he infers from its not being mentioned either by Hovedon, or Sprott, who both wrote very circumstantial accounts of this siege, with the manner in which the city was surprised: and that it was built before the arrival of the Conqueror, he judges from Domesday Book; wherein it appears, that king had it in exchange from the archbishop and abbot of St. Augustine's for twenty-one burghs; of which the former had fourteen, and the latter seven. In the year 1087, being the first of William Rufus, Archbishop Lanfranc having violently obtruded on the monks of St. Augustine, one Guido, or Wido, for their abbot, a great disturbance ensued; for which, some of them being imprisoned by the archbishop, many others took shelter in and about the castle.

In the reign of King Stephen, William earl of Ipres was governor of this castle; and in the time of Richard I. or King John, it appears from an ancient writing belonging to St. Radigund's Abbey, that office was held by Theoricus le Vineter; at which time, William de Hefheford was warden. In the year 1216, it was taken by Lewis, dauphin of France; and in the 12th of Henry III. was under the government of Hubert de Bourg, earl of Kent.

In the reign of Edward II. an order was sent to the sheriff of Kent, to provide this castle with munition and provision. At this time, as also in the preceding reign, it was used for a common gaol, as is proved by the following record, taken from the Crown Rolls, concerning the escape of Walter de Wedering and Martin at Gate, de Lamberherst: "These prisoners of our lord the king, in the castle of Canterbury, sat bound in a certain place called Barbican, nigh the same castle, to beg their bread; it happened that on Shrove Tuesday, in the reign of King Edward II. before sun-set, the same Walter broke the padlock, or a link of the chain wherewith he was bound, and drew away with him the said Martin, against the will of the said Martin, to the church of St. Maries of the castle, where he remained and abjured the kingdom of England, and Martin of his own accord returned to prison." This goal was removed in the time of Henry VIII. first near to St Jacob's, and afterwards to West-gate.
in

DR. PLOTT, in a letter to Bishop Fell, mentions certain Hebrew inscriptions written on the walls of this building: these he supposes done by some Jews, who were, either in the reign of King Richard I. or that of Edward I. there imprisoned.

THIS castle is situated on the south-west side of the city, within its walls, from which it is distant about fifty feet: yet, part of the castle-yard is, according to Somner, out of its jurisdiction. The site, together with the yard and ditches, contain four acres and one rod of land. It was fore-fenced with a barbican, which was a general name for any out-work: this barbican, or (as it was afterwards called) bulwark, was a thick wall defended by four towers: there was likewise a ditch, called the ditch del bayle; i. e. the ditch of the ballium, or advanced work. This formerly surrounded the castle.

THE passage from the city lay over a bridge, and beyond that, through a gate, built at the entrance of the castle-yard, or court; as appears by a deed in the Leger Book of East-bridge Hospital; describing the abutments of some lands. This gate had a porter, or keeper; for in the Crown Rolls, 15th of Edward II. mention is made of the trial of one William Savage, keeper of the gate of the castle of Canterbury, for forcibly seizing the daughter of Hamon Trendherst, carrying her by force and arms to the said castle, and therein detaining her upwards of eight days. The entrance into the castle was seemingly (says Somner) on the west side, by an ascent of steps porched over.

AT present little of the out-works, except their foundations, are remaining; but the body of the castle, though much ruined, is still standing: it is built of rough stone strengthened at the angle with coins, and is nearly square, each external side measuring about eighty-seven feet: the walls are on a medium ten feet thick, and about fifty high, being divided into several stories, and having many small windows irregularly placed: these have some circular arches, ornamented with indented work, like those in Rochester Castle.

THERE are two entrances on the east side; and on the west, towards the south-west angle, an oast for drying hops has been built; this projects beyond the whole wall. No use is at present made of the castle, except that of foddering cattle in winter. The quarter-sessions for the county used to be held here; but this building having long been in a ruinous state, a handsome sessions-house was, in the year 1730, erected at the expence of the county.

THE Reverend Mr. Fremoult, rector of Wooton in this county, is proprietor of the castle; which Somner says, is held of the manor of East Greenwich, by grant from the Crown: the owner, in his time, was Mr. W. Watfon.

WORTH-GATE is usually acknowledged to be of great antiquity, and is mentioned as such by Leland, in his Itinerary. He says: "The most ancient building of the towne appeareth yn the castel, and at Ryder's-gate, where appere long Briton brikes." The old way to London is said to have been along Castle-street, and through this gate; which Somner thinks took its name either from its vicinity to the castle, Worth signifying a fort or castle; or else from a corruption of ward-gate, from the watch and ward kept in and about this fortrefs. This gate being some years ago much out of repair, the corporation proposed taking of it down; when Doctor Gray, a physician of this town, in order to preserve so venerable a piece of antiquity, undertook to support it at his own expence, and accordingly built the wall for that purpose.

THE arch is femicircular; its thickness one foot nine inches, and height seven feet six inches; of which only seven feet is brick-work: it is closed up by the wall built by Doctor Gray; but a nich is left, in which is a bench, the breadth of its opening; at the top of the piers is twelve feet six inches.

THE height of the gate, measured on the outside of the walls, is from the crown of the arch to the ground thirteen feet three inches. Of this, as has been before observed, only seven feet is of brick; the remainder is squared stone.—This drawing was made in the year 1761.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

THE view of the cathedral of Christ Church, Canterbury, here given, was drawn from a place now called the Oaks, and formerly, according to the plan in Battley's Somner, the Convent Garden. The particular station was chosen a small distance south-east of the building; by which choice it appears much fore-shortened, thereby assuming a more picturesque appearance than if viewed in a direction parallel to the spectator. It is, besides, almost the only point of view in which this cathedral has not before been taken.

THE building nearest the eye is called St. Thomas Becket's Crown, built according to the best accounts, for the purpose of receiving the reliques of that turbulent prelate; but the monks finding so great and unexpected a concourse of pilgrims, judged that place, which was a circular chapel of only thirty feet diameter, would not commodiously receive his numerous visitors; they therefore altered their plan, and removed the body from the grave where it had been privately interred, into the chapel of the Holy Trinity; a more spacious building westward of, and adjoining to the crown; by which that chapel soon lost its ancient appellation, the name of the Holy Trinity giving place to that of St. Thomas the Martyr.

AT

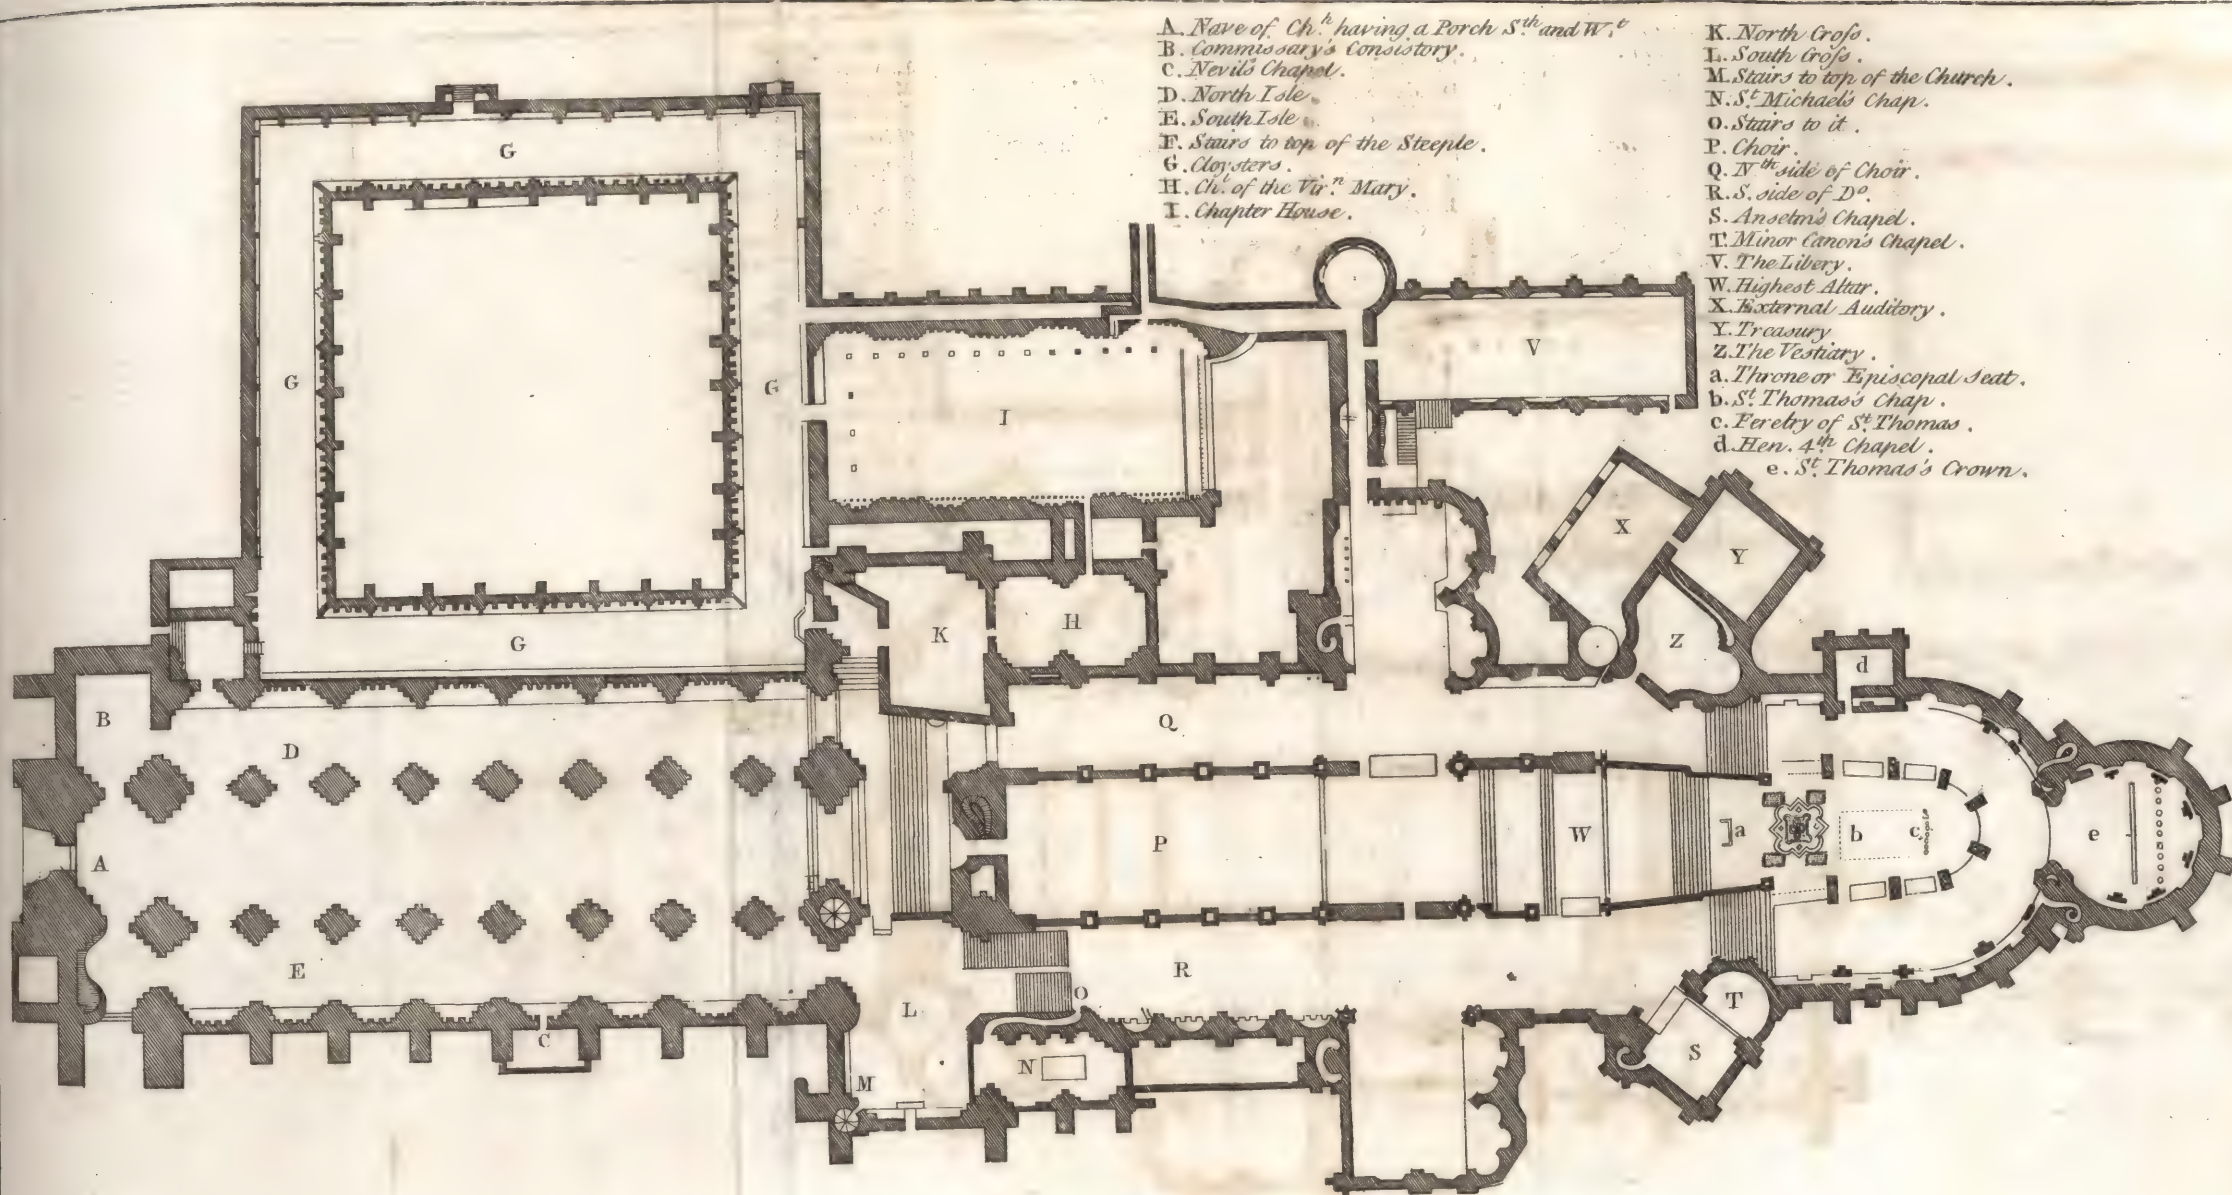

Pub. at D. 1784, by S. Hooper.

Canterbury Cathedral, Kent.

J. Newman sc.

Canterbury Cathedral.

Plat. 25th June 1844, by S. Harper.

Sparrow Se.

Chiding Stone .

AT the time of the reformation, some addition was making to Becket's Crown, which that event put a stop to; and it remained unfinished, and in ruins, till about the year 1755, when Captain Humphrey Pudner, an inhabitant of Canterbury, and in divers other instances a benefactor to the church, gave an hundred pounds towards the completing it; and it was accordingly terminated as is seen in this representation.

BEYOND this is shewn the great tower, called Bell Harry Tower, from a bell of that name hanging therein: also, a small gate, with a circular arch, leading into the church-yard. This is very ancient, and is esteemed a curiosity.—This view was drawn anno 1772.

THE CHIDING STONE.

THIS stone is thought, by many, to be one of those consecrated rocks mentioned by Borlase, in his History of Cornwall, as so much formerly venerated by the northern nations; an instance of which he quotes from Toland, who says the Druids held these consecrated rocks in such estimation, that, if we may credit the accounts we have from Ireland, they covered the famous stone of Clogher (which was a kind of pedestal to the Keshmond Kelfack, the Mercurius Celticus) over with gold. The stone here delineated is of the natural rock, and seems in shape and size extremely similar to one described and represented in Borlase's History of Cornwall, standing in a village called Men, in the parish of Constantine. On the front, shewn in the view, the flat stones, which serve for a kind of pedestal, have somewhat the appearance of steps; whether fashioned by art, or the effect of accident, cannot be ascertained, as time and weather would long ago have effaced the marks of the tool, had any been employed.

There is an obscure and almost forgotten tradition among the ancient people of this village, that in former times this was a holy stone, on which a priest used to sit and hear the confessions of the people, who resorted in numbers to ask his prayers, and receive

receive absolution; and that his admonitions and reproofs procured it the appellation of the Chiding Stone, a name it still bears; and, as the story goes, from it the village likewise obtained the name of Chiding Stone.

THIS is evidently an absurd story; all that it is meant to shew, is the existence of a tradition that this was formerly a place of worship, the circumstances of which have been perverted in passing through the mouths of the different relators.

THE size of this rock may be judged by the figures, which here were intended as a scale. It stands in a farm-yard south of the street. The village of Chiding-stone is in the south-west part of the county, and about four miles south-west of Tunbridge.

THE tradition above mentioned is little known. A gentleman, to whom I applied for information relative to this rock, though an inhabitant of the place, and a lover of antiquities, had never heard of it; neither, as he said, was the stone generally looked on as a curiosity. On this account, I would not have inserted it, but for the request of several gentlemen who deem it curious, and who hope, through its publication, to hear the matter discussed by some person conversant in those kinds of monuments.—This drawing was made anno 1768.

CHILHAM CASTLE.

CHILHAM lyes towards the east part of the county, by the river Stour, about three miles north of Wye. Camden says, "It is a current opinion among the inhabitants, that Julius Cæsar encamped here in his second expedition against the Britons, and that from thence it was called Julham, as if one should say, 'Julius, station, or house;' and if I mistake not, they have truth on their side: for Cæsar himself tells us, that after he had marched by night twelve miles from the shore, he first encountered the Britons upon a river; and after he had beat them into the woods, that he encamped there; where the Britons, having cut down a great

Chilham Castle, Kent.

great number of trees, were posted in a place wonderfully fortified both by nature and art. Now this place is exactly twelve miles from the sea coast, nor is there another river between; so that of necessity his first march must have been hither, where he kept his men encamped ten days, till he had refitted his fleet (which had been shattered very much by a storm) and got it to the shore. Below this town is a green barrow, said to be the burying-place of one Jul-Laber many ages since, who, some will tell you was a giant, others, a witch. For my own part, imagining all along that there might be something of real antiquity couched under that name, I am almost persuaded that Laberius Dûrus, the tribune slain by the Britons in their march from the camp we spoke of, was buried here: and that from him the barrow was called Jul-Laber." With all due deference to Mr. Camden, under the above description, Chilham cannot be the place meant by Cæsar; that spot being in a right line upwards of sixteen statute miles from Deal, the place near which it is agreed that Cæsar landed. Now sixteen English miles measure nearly seventeen and a quarter according to the Roman estimation: a difference too considerable to be mistaken by so experienced a general as that emperor.

THE castle is, however, doubtless a place of great antiquity. Both Kilbourn and the Deering Manuscript make it the seat of King Lucius, the first Christian king, who flourished A. D. 182. Philpot says, that in digging the foundations for the fine house built near the castle by Sir Dudley Diggs, many Roman vessels and utensils were found, as also the traces of a more ancient building. He likewise mentions a kind of senate-house, which was preserved till his time. It was built round with seats, cut out of an excellent and durable stone. Leland says, it was called the castle of Joshua, but does not assign any reason for that appellation.

DURING the time of the Heptarchy, according to Harris, it was under the care of the kings of Kent, and was in particular fortified by King Wightred, who made it a place of strength and defence; but it was nevertheless afterwards taken, sacked and demolished by the Danes in their excursions into these parts. It remained in ruins till the time of the conquest, when William assigned it to Fulbert de Dover, who held it by the service of castle-guard, being obliged to find fifteen men to guard the castle of Dover for twenty weeks in every year, mounting three at a time. This Fulbert's surname was Lucy; but he chose rather to be distinguished by the denomination of the place he was intrusted to defend, considering it as a token of the confidence reposed in him by his sovereign. But his son Richard, in a charter dated the 16th of King John, by which this castle is restored to Rothesia, or Rose de Dover, with all its appendages, is called Richard de Lucy. King John the year before had committed the custody of this castle to Thomas Peverell, and in that grant it is called an honour. It held of the king in capite, and had about eighteen several manors depending on it. Lambard thinks it was for some time in the hands of the archbishop of Canterbury, because King John came thither to treat with Stephen Langton about a reconciliation between them. "But certain it is (says Harris) that by Rose above mentioned it went in marriage to Richard, base son of King John; and by one of her two daughters and co-heirs, Isabella, it went into the possession of David de Strabolgy, Earl of Athol. This Isabella afterwards married Alexander Baliol, who in her right was lord of Chilham, and called to sit in parliament by that title. She died here at Chilham, A. D. 1292. And I find him claiming great privileges here before the Justices itinerant, in the 7th of King Edward I. as hundred, furcas, tumbril, pillorium, infangenthef, assisiam panis & cervesiæ, &c. fine cartâ, by ancient custom. And in the 21st of the said reign, he claimed a free warren here, a market on Tuesday, and an eight days fair, viz. three days before, on, and four days after, the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin." But Philpot saith, that David's son, John earl of Athol, strenuously opposing King Edward I. in his design of reducing Scotland, was taken prisoner and hanged at Canterbury, on a gibbet of fifty feet high; and being cut down alive alive and beheaded, had his body burned; and this estate with the rest was forfeited to the crown, where it staid till King Edward II. in his 5th year, granted the castle and manor of Chilham to Bartholomew Lord Badelesmere. And he also forfeiting it to the crown, as has been shewed in the account of Leeds Castle, it was granted for life to David de Strabolgy, grand-son to him before-mentioned; and on his death reverting to the crown, it was in the 3d of King Edward III. granted to Bartholomew de Badelesmere, son to the lord of that name above spoken of. His son Giles dying without issue, it went with Margaret, one of his four sisters and coheirs, in marriage to William Lord Roos of Hemlake; whose descendant, Thomas Lord Roos, espousing the Lancastrian cause, was taken prisoner in a battle by some of the partizans of the house of York, and beheaded at Newcastle.

THIS estate had, on his engaging with that party, before his execution been granted by Edward IV. to Sir John Scot of Scot's Hall, in Kent, privy-counsellor to that prince, to whom it was granted for life. At his death it returned to the crown, where it remained till the reign of Henry VIII. That prince granted it to Sir Thomas Cheyney, who resided here. When Leland made his perambulation, he saith, that the buildings here were very fine. Sir Thomas afterwards pulled them down, and carried the materials to build his house at Shurland, in the isle of Shepey. His son, created a baron by Queen Elizabeth, having by his extravagances greatly impoverished himself, was obliged to sell most of his estates; among them this castle and manor, which was purchased by Sir Thomas Kemp; whose son of the same name leaving only four daughters, with Mary, one of them, part of this estate went in marriage to Sir Dudley Diggs, who purchased the shares of the others. This Sir Dudley Diggs was master of the rolls, A. D. 1636. He erected the present dwelling-house near the castle. At his decease the castle and manor devolved to his eldest son, Thomas Diggs, Esq. whose other sons dying without issue, it came to his youngest son, Leonard; whose son, Col. Thomas Diggs, sold it to Mr. Colebrook, father of Robert Colebrook, Esq.

the

the present proprietor. At present only the keep remains, which is evidently of Norman construction. It is an octagon, with a square building, containing a staircase adjoining to the east side. The ground-floor is used for a brewhouse; the first story from the ground is converted into a kitchen and other offices: on the second floor is an octagon room, handsomely fitted up, having two sash windows in it, and a fire-place; the chimney-piece seems pretty ancient; some of the bricks in the chimney are set herring-bone fashion. From hence the stairs lead to a platform covered with lead, where there is a delightful prospect. On the west side is another building, running from north to south, and for some of the out-offices of the house; on this side are the traces of a deep ditch.—This drawing, which presents the south-east aspect, was made anno 1773.

COWLING CASTLE, (PLATE I.)

COWLING Castle takes its name from the parish wherein it is situated, which lyes on the north side of the county, near the river Thames, about four miles north of Rochester.

It was built by John Lord Cobham, who, in the 24th year of the reign of King Richard II. obtained a licence for its erection. There is a tradition that he, fearing its strength might give some umbrage at court, to obviate it, caused the following lines to be cut on a scroll, with an appendant seal of his arms, in imitation of a deed or charter, and fixed on the easternmost tower of the chief entrance;

Knoweth that beth and shall be
That I am made in help of the contre
In knowing of whiche thing
This is chartre and witnessing.

WHATEVER was the cause, this scroll is now there; it seems of brass; the letters are engraved in the ancient character, and in 1759.

Cowling Castle Kent.
Pub. 20 May 1884 by C. Hooper.

1759, when this drawing was taken, were as legible as when first set up; the scroll and seal are shewn in the view.

IN this castle resided the pious and intrepid Sir John Oldcastle, who, in the reign of King Henry V. fell a victim to popish cruelty.

ANNO 1553, Sir Thomas Wiat, in his insurrection against Queen Mary, attempted to take this castle. Kilburne says, "the gate was broke open with his ordnance;" but it was so well defended by the Lord Cobham, its owner, that Sir Thomas was at length obliged to desist.

"The ruins (says Harris, in his History of Kent) shew it to have been a very strong place, and the moat round it is very deep. The gate-house is still standing, which is fortified with a portcluse, or portcullis, and machicolated; it hath also such kind of towers for its defence as were used in those days."

IN the History of Rochester, and its environs, lately published, there is this note: "We have some reason to think Sir John Falstaff, of truly comic memory, inhabited Cooling Castle, and that his name was Old Castle, as appears in an old manuscript of Shakespeare's Henry IV." The cause of this mistaken notion was, Shakespeare originally gave the name of Sir John Oldcastle to that facetious knight, a character purely the child of his creative fancy; this offending some of that family then remaining, Queen Elizabeth ordered him to change it, whereupon he called his hero Falstaff. The dissimilarity of the character of the Sir John Oldcastle who resided here, and suffered for his religion, to that of the profligate Sir John Oldcastle depicted by Shakespeare, would besides sufficiently prove they could not both be meant for the same person, had not the existence of the dramatic knight been universally acknowledged fictitious; something of the change of name is hinted at in the epilogue to the second part of Henry IV. where we meet the following passage, perhaps meant as an apology: "When for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions! for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man."

THE present remains consist of a handsome gate fronting the south, flanked by two round towers; on the west are the walls of a square fort, surrounded by a ditch or moat, formerly supplied with water from the Thames, but now almost choaked up. This building seems to have been independent of the gate, which probably led to the mansion, on the site whereof stands a farm house.

THIS castle went with the daughter of the Cobham family to Sir Thomas Whitmore, who sold it to Frederick Herne, Esq. from him it was purchased by Mr. Thomas Best, a brewer at Chatham, whose grandson is the present proprietor.

(P L A T E II.)

THIS view shews the north, or inner side of the gate, as seen from the farm house; from the evenness of the wall, and some coin stones in the angles, it seems as if the towers were never intended to be completed; the tradition, which relates that they were thus demolished by Sir Thomas Wiat, could only be credible, had he battered them from within.—This drawing was made anno 1759.

DARTFORD PRIORY.

DARTFORD lyes at the north side of the county, by the rivers Darent and Cray, about a mile distant from the Thames, and nearly six miles west of Gravesend.

HERE, about the year 1355, King Edward III. founded and endowed a fine nunnery, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Margaret. Lambard seems to be of opinion here was, before that foundation, a royal house. "I read (says he) that in the time of King Henry III. Frederick the emperor sent hither the archbishop of Colein, accompanied with fundry noble personages, to demaunde Isabell, the king's sister, to be given to him in marriage: the which (forasmuch as the embassadours lyked the young lady well)

Cowling Castle Kent.
Pitts. May 1784 by S. Heuer

Sparrow 1784

Dartford Priory, Kent.

W. H. Sturt del.

well) was (after such a solemnization as in absence may be performed) married unto him at this towne, and then delivered to the orators to be carried over.

“ WHEREBY I make this conjecture, that although there be not in storie mention made of any great building at Dartforde, before the time of the abbay, which was raised long after this marriage, yet there was some faire house of the King's, or of some other, even at that time there; for otherwise, I know not how to make it a meete place for so honourable an appointment.” If any such house existed, it might probably be given to these nuns. Indeed the charter of Edward III. printed in the Monasticon, recites, among other grants, that of the mansion-house in which the nuns then dwelt.

THE prioress and nuns were first of the order of St. Augustine, then of St. Dominic, after that Augustine; again at the dissolution, Dominicans, but under the government of the black friars; and those of Langley, in Hertfordshire, seem to have had that care. According to Kilburn, Bridget, fourth daughter of King Edward IV. was prioress here; as were also the daughters of the Lords Scrope and Beaumont. Divers other ladies of noble families were prioresses and religious in this house, which was nobly endowed.

IN the Monasticon there is the charter of King Edward III. wherein he declares himself the founder, and bestows on this nunnery the site of the monastery, with the mansion-house above mentioned: and also grants and confirms to them divers manors, lands and tenements, in the counties of Kent, Surry, Suffex, Essex, Suffolk, Wiltshire, London, and Glamorganshire, with the advowsons of many churches and chapels.

KING RICHARD III. gives several manors in Norfolk, for the maintenance of a chaplain to pray for his good estate when living, and his soul after his decease, with those of the founders and benefactors of that monastery; for the prioress and nuns, with their successors; and for the souls of all the faithful defunct for ever.

LAMBARD says, because some imperfections were found in diverse of the grants of Edward III. "King Edward IV. in the 7th year of his reign, vouchsafed them a new patent of confirmation and amendment;" but this charter is not among those preserved in the Monasticon.

IN the 26th of Henry VIII. this monastery appears, according to Dugdale, to have been endowed with 380l. 9s. ob. per annum, Dugdale; or 408l. as the MS. Valor. Joan Fane, or Vane, the last abbess, surrendered her convent and had a pension of 66l. 13s. 4d. assigned her; at which time there remained 6l. in fees, and 38l. 13s. 4d. in annuities; and the following pensions, viz. to Joane Fane, 66l. 13s. 4d.—Agnes Roper, 6l.—Elizabeth White, Mary Bentham, Katherine Eflyn, Dorothy Sidley, Elizabeth Exume, Maud Frier, Anne Bosome, Alice Davice, Margaret Walner, Agnes Lego, Katharine Clovell, 5l. each.—Mary Blower, 4l.—Elianor Woode, Alice Grenesmythe, Catharine Garret, Alice Bostock, and Elizabeth Seygood, 2l. each. Both Lambard and Kilburne say, that King Henry VIII. at a considerable expence, either built here, or converted the house of the monastery into a royal mansion; and August 18th, in the 32d year of his reign, granted to Sir Richard Long, knt. the office of keeper thereof, with the fee or wages of eightpence per day, and half an acre of wood for firing, to be delivered to him there by his wood-reeves, and there only to be used and expended.

THIS office and emoluments were, on Sir Richard Long's decease, granted by King Edward VI. in the 1st year of his reign, to Lord Thomas Seymour, knight of the garter, and lord high-admiral of England. It was the next year granted by the king, with certain lands in Surry, to the Lady Anne Cleve, the repudiated wife of Henry VIII. reserving the above-mentioned fee of 8d. per diem to Lord Seymour, and 20s. per annum to the bailiff of the manor; after her decease, which happened the 4th of May, these premises were the next year given to the house of friars preachers, at Langley in the county of Herts, then restored; but on their re-dissolution in the 1st of Elizabeth, they once more reverted verted to the Crown, and the queen kept them in her own hands, and rested at her house here, in her return from a progress she had made into Kent, in the 16th year of her reign. They continued in the Crown till the 4th of James I. when that king granted them, among other estates to Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury, in exchange for the house and manor of Theobalds in the county of Herts; he, in the 10th of that reign, conveyed them to Sir Robert Darcy, Knt. and his heirs. Sir Edward, on taking possession of this house, gave it the name of Dartford Place, which appellation it has ever since borne.

EDWARD DARCY, grandson of Sir Robert above-mentioned, sold this mansion and estates to Thomas George of London, Esq. who left three sons, who all successively possessed them; Edward the youngest dying a bachelor bequeathed it by his will to his nephew, Robert Mynors of Herefordshire, Esq.; he devised it to his widow Mary, now wife of Charles Morgan, Esq. member of parliament for the county of Brecon, who in her right possesses it.

TANNER, under the article of this monastery, says, "It was granted to Edmund Mervyn, 36 Henry VIII. which with respect to the mansion and site seems a mistake, as the appointments of Sir Richard Long and Lord Seymour are authenticated by enrolments in the Augmentation Office. Probably the grant to Mervyn was of some other possessions, formerly part of the estates of this monastery." He adds, "Dorman saith, Queen Mary restored the nuns at Dartford, but I have not met with any record to justify that assertion."

THE following account of the present state of the remains of this monastery was communicated to me in a letter from John Thorpe, Esq. of Bexley, dated November 9, 1771: "Saturday last, I went and took a particular view of the ruins of Dartford Nunnery, and found, that what remains of it is only a fine gateway, and some contiguous buildings now used as a farm-house; the gateway is now a stable for the farmer's horses, and over it is a large room, serving, I suppose, for a hay-loft. The site of the abbey was where the farmer's garden and stack-yard now are, and must have been a vast pile of building; and doubtless very noble, suitable to such great personages as were members of it, as appears by a great number of foundations of cross walls, drains, &c. which have been discovered. There were, and are to this day, two broad roads, or avenues, leading to the gate; one eastward, as you have described in your view of it, and flanked by the old stone wall on the right hand, from the street called Water-side, which leads down to the creek where the boats and barges come up from the Thames. This was certainly one of the principal avenues from the town to the abbey. The other is to the west, leading into the farm-yard, fronting the arch of the west side of the great tower or gateway. This way leads from the farm-yard up to the side of the hill into the great road to London; and the large hilly field, on the right hand, adjoining the road leading as above, is to this day called the King's Field. This abbey and its environs, took up a great extent of land; for on the north-east side, fronting this view, were the large gardens and orchards, encompassed with the ancient stone wall still entire, and more than half a mile round, inclosing a piece of ground of twelve acres, now, and has been for a number of years, rented by gardeners, to supply the London markets, and famous for producing the best artichokes in England. On the left hand of the road leading from Water-street to the east front of the abbey, are fine meadows, extending from the back part of the High-street up to the building, or Abbey Farm; and opposite the long garden wall, on the right side of the said road, and, without doubt, much more lands, now converted into gardens and tenements, formerly lay open, and belonged to it. Besides the vicinity of this abbey to the Thames, the town of Dartford is finely watered by streams from the river Darent, which runs through it, and from which it derives its name.

THIS plate, which gives a north-east view, was drawn anno 1759. The pinnacles shewn on the top of the gateway, have since been thrown down in placing an iron conductor, to prevent accidents from lightning.

Pub. 20 June 1844, by S. Hooper

Dayington Priory, Kent.

THE PRIORY OF DAVYNGTON, NEAR FAVERSHAM.

ON a hill, about half a mile west of Faversham, and on the opposite side of the creek, stands the nunnery of Davyngton. It was founded, according to Lambard and Kilburne, by Henry II. about the 2d year of his reign, for black nuns, and dedicated to Mary Magdalene: the former says, "in emulation, as it may seeme, of that which his immediate predecessor king Stephen had erected at Faversham itself." Southouse was at first also of this opinion; for in his Monasticon Faverhamiense, after reciting almost verbatim the above passage from Lambard, he adds, "but others would have Fulke de Newnham to be founder thereof: but I am apt to incline, that Fulke de Newnham was rather a benefactor than founder thereof." Mr. Southouse afterwards saw some writings belonging to Mr. John Hulse, of Newnham, which made him alter his opinion: this circumstance was transcribed from his own copy of his book, into an interleaved Monasticon formerly belonging to his son, Mr. Filmer Southouse, but now the property of Edward Jacobs, Esq. of Faversham; from whence probably it was copied by Mr. Lewis, who, in his Antiquities of Faversham, mentions it as if printed in the Monasticon Faverhamiense, where the contrary, as quoted above, is directly asserted. Dugdale is silent as to the foundation, and Tanner thus doubtfully mentions it: "A Benedictine Nunnery founded A. D. 1153, as it is said, by Fulke de Newnham." His authorities, as pointed out in a note, are the MS. collections of Mr. Nicholas Batteley, and the aforementioned writings of Mr. Hulse. Indeed, the scantiness of its endowments seems very unlike a royal foundation, especially made in emulation by so munificent a prince as Henry II. From these writings it appears to have been founded by Fulke de Newnham, in the 18th year of King Stephen, A. D. 1153, for the endowment of which he appropriated to it the church of Newnham. The nuns were styled the nuns of St. Mary Magdalene of Davington; and, on account of the smallness of their estate, the poor poor nuns of Davington: there were here originally twenty six religious, but in the 17th of Edward III. no more than fourteen. Their habit was a black coat, cloak, coul and veil. Walter Reynolds, archbishop of Canterbury, is said, about the year 1326, to have given them rules and ordinances written in the French tongue. Tanner observes, they were neither French women, as supposed by Archdeacon Harpsfield, nor Clugniacs, as said by Lewis.

KING HENRY III. in the 39th year of his reign, confirmed to the prioress and nuns of this house all that land, with the mill standing thereon, with their other appurtenances in Monketon, which they have of the gift of Matthew Fitz Hamon at Frith; and all that land with the purtenances in the tenure of Ospringe, which they have of the gift of Gervase de Beseville; and all that land, with the appurtenances in the same tenure, which they have of the gift of Robert de Sylegrave, and Emma his wife; and two acres and a half of land, and ten-pence and two hens of annual rent, with the appurtenances in the same tenure of the gift of Hamon and Stephen, the heirs of William de Church; and one messuage, with the appurtenances in Westbrok, in the same tenure, of the gift of Walter de Bridge; and 2s. and 7d. of yearly rent, with the appurtenances at Westbrok, in the same tenure, of the gift of Stephen de Girrenges; and 9s. 2½d. and nine hens and seventy eggs of yearly rent, with the appurtenances in the same tenure, of the gift of Guncelin Fitz Richard; and 2s. and one hen of yearly rent, &c. in the same tenure, of the gift of Lucy de Hornclyve; and 2s. 6d. and five hens of yearly rent, &c. in the same tenure, of the gift of Ernulph Fitz Hyroney; and 3s. 4d. and three hens of yearly rent, &c. in the same tenure, of the gift of Hanger Taylefer: and 5d. of yearly rent, &c. in the same tenure, of the gift of William Cook; and all that land, with its appurtenances in the same tenure, which they have of the gift of Robert le Wred; and 4s. of yearly rent, &c. in Winchelsey, of the gift of William Fitz Wulven; and half a marc of yearly rent, &c. in Sandwyk, of the gift of Martin Fitz William; and 2s. of rent in the same town, of the gift of Thomas de Ercheslag; and 12s. and two geese of yearly rent, &c. in the isle of Gren, of the gift of Ralph de Wydegate; and 2s. 6d. of rent, &c. in Rommenhale, of the gift of Hamon Pekelyn; and 2s. of rent, &c. in Wye, of the gift of Osmand, the son of Edward de Tunstall. These gifts the king ordered that the prioress and nuns should have and hold, with all the liberties and free customs pertaining to them, and that they and their successors, in whatever places they have lands, should be for ever quit of suits of counties and hundred, from view of franc-pledge and law-days turn, and from aid of sheriffs, and all other bailiffs and ministers of the king. This charter of confirmation is dated the 22d day of April.
rent

IN the 17th of King Edward III. A. D. 1343, the prioress and nuns presented a petition to the king, representing, that from their great poverty they were unable to pay the common taxes and aids, without depriving themselves of their necessary subsistence; whereupon the king issued out his writ to the sheriff of Kent, directing him to make enquiry into the revenues possessed by the nuns, their number, and whether the facts stated in the petition were true. What was the event is nowhere mentioned. A schedule of their income was by the nuns presented with their petition; part of it is torn off, the remainder is printed in Lewis's Antiquities of Faversham. The particulars which remain in lands, mills, tythes, pensions, and the parsonage of Newnham, amount only to 22l. 13s. 10d. but herein their best lands are only estimated at the yearly rent of one shilling per acre, and the worst at threepence.

THIS nunnery is said to have never been dissolved, but in the 27th Henry VIII. to have escheated to the Crown; it being found before the escheator of the county of Kent, that there were neither prioress nor nuns, they being all dead before that time; so that it fell to the king, tanquam locum profanum et dissolutum. This is partly confirmed by Lambard, who says, "the name or value is not read in the register of the general suppression of the religious houses, because (as I have heard) it escheated to the king before that time, or forfeited for not maintaining the due number of nonnes appointed by the foundation."

IN the 38th of Henry VIII. that king sold it to Sir Thomas Cheyney, and covenanted by his letters patent to maintain the said Sir Thomas and his heirs in the quiet possession thereof, against all persons whatsoever.

His son, the Lord Cheyney, 8th of Elizabeth, conveyed it to Joseph Bradborn, who, in the 10th of the said reign, alienated it to Avery Giles, whose son, the 20th of that queen, sold it to Mr. Edwards. It went with his daughter in marriage to John Bonte, of Essex, Esq. and from him descended to his son, whose daughter, Mrs. Mary Bonte, carried it to the Reverend Mr. John Shirwin, from whom it passed to his brother's son, Mr. William Shirwin of Deptford, and devolved to his only son, Mr. John Shirwin; who dying lately, it became the property of his son, a minor.

THE church or chapel still serves as such for the parishioners; it is small, but has the appearance of great antiquity, having the arches of its doors and windows circular; that of the chief entrance is decorated with ornaments in the Saxon style: to it there was a covered way from the monastery, so that the nuns could repair to it without going out of doors. Here are the ruins of two monuments, one of them mural, but they are neither ancient or curious. The front of the house seen in the view was part of the ancient building. It is now converted into a farm-house, for which purpose it has been repaired, and the present windows put in; but the marks where the old ones were, are still distinguishable. The only remains besides these, are a part of the cloister neatly cieled with wood, and on the south side, the great hall or refectory, in which is an organ loft; part of the organ is still standing. All the other buildings having been much shattered by the blowing up of a powder-mill, were many years ago taken down.

THE estate is a manor, and now and then holds courts; the quit-rents are very trifling.—This view was drawn in the year 1758.

DOVER

C. H. Bennett sculp. Dover.

DOVER CASTLE, PLATE 1.st

— published by the 20th of November 1743 by S. Hooper. —

DOVER CASTLE. (PLATE I.)

THIS castle stands on a steep hill, eastward of, and over-looking the town of Dover; which hill, towards the sea, terminates in a high and almost perpendicular chalky cliff, variegated with samphire, and chequered with horizontal strata of black flints; and is the western extremity of that ridge, which commencing near Deal, forms the south foreland. Lambard derives its name from the British word Dufirha, high or steep. This derivation is approved of by Camden.

OF the foundation of this fortress, the following account is given, in a record extracted ex brevia regis de anno 14 Ed. II. written in old French, and printed in Dugdale's Monasticon.

"FORTY-SEVEN years before the nativity of Christ, Julius Cæsar invaded the Britons, then governed by Cassibalanus, and was by them twice repulsed; but in a third attack, being assisted by Androgen, duke of Kent and London, he vanquished them on Barham Downs, between Dover and Canterbury: nevertheless Cæsar, through the interposition of Androgen, permitted Cassibalanus to retain his kingdom, on condition of paying to the Romans an annual tribute of a denier for each messuage in his land; he likewise erected a tower here for the receipt of this tribute, which tower still remains.

"A. D. 72. Arviragus refusing to pay this imposition, fortified the castle of Dover with ditches and mines, and stored it with all the necessaries for a vigorous defence; whereupon Claudius Cæsar commenced a war with him; but it was terminated by the marriage of Arviragus with Gemussa, daughter of Claudius, and his submission to the payment of the tribute: he afterwards built the city of Claudiuscester, or Gloucester, which he so named in honour of Claudius.

"In the year 180, King Lucius being converted by Pope Eleutherius, built here a church, wherein was afterwards placed by Aldalbald, son of Ethelbert, twenty-four secular canons, who remained remained here 105 years; but at length, in the year 696, Withred king of Kent, thinking his castle in danger from these canons, who went in and out at all hours, and had frequent disputes with the officers of the garrison, removed them to the church of St. Martin, in the town of Dover.

"A. D. 469. King Arthur greatly added to, and improved this castle; particularly building the hall called after his name; and the chamber for his wife, styled Gwaonebour; that is, Guanguara's chamber."

CAMDEN says, "the common people dream of its being built by Julius Cæsar; and I conclude it was really first built by the Romans, from those British bricks in the chapel, which they used in their larger sort of buildings. When the Roman empire began to hasten to its end, a number of the Tungricans, who were reckoned among the aids palatine, were placed by them here in garrison; part of whose armour those great arrows seem to have been, which they used to shoot out of engines like cross-bows, and which are shewn in the castle as miracles." He likewise mentions an ancient table hung up and kept here, which gave much the same account of the foundation, as before recited.

WILLIAM the Conqueror, immediately after the battle of Hastings, marched along the sea-coast to take possession of this castle, which for a short time made a shew of resistance, but on his near approach surrendered at discretion; when, to intimidate the commanders of other strong holds, he caused both the governor, Stephen Ashburnham (by some called a baron) and Allen of Evering, his lieutenant, to be beheaded. After remaining here for about eight days, during which time he directed repairs and additions to be made to the fortifications, he marched directly for London, leaving behind him a strong garrison, and the sick and wounded of his army. Shortly after, he deputed the government to his kinsman, John Fiennes, making the office of constable hereditary in his family; and, in order to defray the expences of a sufficient garrison for the defence of this important place, he gave him, according to Lambard, fifty-six, Kilburn says one hundred dred and twenty-six, and the Sandwich Manuscript has it one hundred and fifteen, knight's fees of land. This gift likewise enabled him to complete some works already begun, and also to make considerable additions to this fortress.

THESE estates, Fiennes, according to Kilburn, afterwards distributed, in the following parcels, to eight knights, who were to act as his lieutenants, and were bound by their tenure not only to contribute towards the maintenance of one thousand men, and to keep in repair their several allotted towers and bulwarks, but also annually to perform the personal service of ward for the times here specified:

Sir William of Albrance had 21 knights fees, and warded 82 weeks.

Sir William of Arfick had 81 knights fees, and warded 24 weeks.

Sir Fulbert of Dover had 15 knights fees, and warded 20 weeks.

Sir Jeffery Peverell had 14 knights fees, and warded 20 weeks.

Sir William Mamouth had 24 knights fees, and warded 32 weeks.

Sir Robert Porthe had 12 knights fees, and warded 24 weeks.

Sir Hugh Crevecœur had 5 knights fees, and warded 24 weeks.

Sir Adam Fitzwilliams had 6 knights fees, and warded 24 weeks.

KING JOHN afterwards took this castle into his own hands, giving a compensation to the heir of Fiennes; and in the reign of Henry III. anno 1260, Hubert de Burgh, then constable, prevailed on that king to change the personal service for a payment of ten shillings laid on the land, for every warder wherewith it was chargeable. This new rent was called castle-ward, and was applied to the hiring and maintaining of many sworn warders or officers. It continued thus till the 32d of Henry VIII. when an act of parliament was passed, enacting the annexed clauses: "That the owners of lands holden of the castle of Dover, who were bound by their tenures to pay rents at the said castle, upon great penalties, called surfizés, should for the future pay the same rents to the king in the Exchequer, on the day of Simon and Jude, or within fifteen days after, on pain of paying double the sum.

That any one bound to build or repair, should do it accordingly. During the time the king held any of the lands for wardship, or premier seisin, no rent was to be paid for castle-ward to Dover. A hundred and sixty pounds should be quarterly paid every year to the constable of the castle at Dover, at the common hall, in the city of Canterbury, by the king's general receiver, to discharge officers and soldiers; and that the constable of Dover castle should survey and controul the keepers and chief officers of the castles, block-houses and bulwarks, in Kent and Sussex, and all officers, soldiers and munition there."

THIS castle was, according to Matthew Paris, styled the very lock and key of the kingdom: and indeed the Conqueror seemed to think no less of it; for when he agreed with Harold in Normandy for the possession of the crown of England, after the death of Edward the Confessor, he particularly stipulated that he should deliver up to him this castle, with the well therein. Soon after the conquest, when he for a while returned to Normandy, the Kentishmen being grievously oppressed by his regents, Odo and Fitzosborn, sent to Eustace earl of Boulogne, to assist them in surprising the castle. This he in vain attempted with a powerful fleet, and was obliged to retire with considerable loss. King Stephen, in the contention between him and the empress Maud for the crown of England, procured it to be delivered up to him by Walkelin, the governor thereof; and anno 1066, when Lewis the dauphin of France came hither, at the instigation of the pope, and by the invitation of the barons, and had made himself master of most of the castles in the southern counties, his father hearing that he had not got possession of Dover castle, swore by St. James's arm, he had not gained a foot of land in England. He therefore essayed to obtain it from Hubert de Burgh, the governor; first by solicitations and promises, and afterwards by force; in both of which he proved equally unsuccessful. In his attack he cut a trench from the postern gate right down to the river, which has since been called the Port Dike.

Godfrey St.

Dover - Castle.

Engr. by J. H. Stanger, 1841.

It was in the keeping of the barons during their contest with King Henry III.; and such was their idea of its importance, and fear of its falling into the hands of that monarch, that when he had invited, and was visited by his brother Richard, earl of Cornwall, then king of the Romans, they would suffer neither the earl, any of his retinue, nor even the king himself, to enter its gates. During part of this reign it was in the possession of Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, who held it till his death. Hither he used to send his prisoners of war, and here he kept confined Edward the king's son, who afterwards reigned by the name of Edward I. This prince, by the assistance of Roger Mortimer, having made his escape, after the defeat of the earl, attacked and (by the help of some prisoners, who made themselves masters of the great tower) took the castle, wherein was Guy, the earl's son, whom he left prisoner, but who soon found means to bribe his keepers and escape.—This drawing was made in the year 1762.

(PLATE II.)

THE former plate represented the west side of the castle; this exhibits its appearance when viewed from the north, and shews the amazing assemblage of embattled walls, towers, dikes, and mounts, constructed for its defence; increased during the preceding and last war, by the addition of several batteries, on which cannon are mounted; these occupy near thirty acres of ground. From the south side of the castle, where the cliff measures three hundred and twenty feet in perpendicular height, the coast of France and the church of Calais are, in a clear day, plainly visible to the naked eye. Indeed its elevated situation, commanding so extensive a prospect, was deemed by the Romans a proper spot for the erection of a pharos or watch tower; and they accordingly constructed one there; the remains of which are still to be seen at the west end of a ruined church, said to have been founded by King Lucius.

THIS

THIS castle, besides the keep or dungeon built by King Henry II. had two subterranean Sally ports, whose outlets were called barbicans; likewise several others of the ordinary fashion, and seventeen towers; all named either from their builders, the persons who by their tenures were bound to keep them in repair, or after the officers to whose care the separate custody of them was entrusted. All these are particularly described in a curious manuscript history of this place, written by William Darrel, chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, quoted by Harris: there were likewise several wells, of which only two remain; one in the keep two hundred and fifty feet in depth; and also a reservoir capable of holding ninety tons of water.

FOR the regular government of the place, and the supply of the exigencies of the garrison, here were the following officers and artificers; a commissary, a lieutenant, a marshal, a learned steward, a clerk of the exchequer, a gentleman porter, and four yeomen porters, a serjeant at arms, a boarder, a serjeant of the admiralty, being anciently the marshal's deputy; serjeants to arrest, and other serjeants to serve processes; a serjeant of the artillery, an armourer, smith, plumber, carpenter, and two warreners; also a priest, whose house was called Cocklecoe; all these had particular salaries. All civil causes were here heard before the constable or lord warden; the castle being extra-judicial, or independent both of the corporation of Dover and the county of Kent. But of this practice a complaint was made by a petition in parliament, anno 1403, 5th of Henry IV. whereupon the ancient records of the castle were ordered to be laid before the king's council, who were authorized by parliament to do justice. A market was likewise kept for the convenience of the garrison, whose complement was a thousand foot and one hundred horse.

THE buildings here have several times fallen into decay; and at different periods undergone several thorough repairs. In the time of Henry IV. anno 1406, Sir Thomas Erpingham, then constable, caused a survey to be made, and restored all the towers and

PLAN OF DOVER CASTLE. KENT. Pl. II.

Published 20 June 1786, by S. Hooper

References.

- 1 Old Tower.
- 2 Albranche or Rokesley's Tower.
- 3 Chilham, Fulberts, or Chalderscot Tower.
- 4 Hurst Tower.
- 5 Arsic or Say's Tower.
- 6 Gatton Tower.
- 7 Peverell's, Beauchamp's or the Marshall's Tower.
- 8 Port's, Galling's, or Mary's Tower.

- 9 Fienes, Newgate, or the Constable's Tower.
- 10 Clopton, or the Treasurer's Tower.
- 11 Godsfoe Tower.
- 12 Craville, or the Earl of Norfolk's Tower.
- 13 Fitz William's, or St. John's Tower.
- 14 Watch Towers.
- 15 Avrancher, or Maunsel's Tower.
- 16 Wyville's, or Pencheester's Tower.

- 17 Earl Goodwin's Tower.
- 18 Ashfordian Tower.
- 19 Mortimer's Tower.
- 20 Clinton's Tower.
- 21 Colton's Tower and Gate.
- 22 Harcourt's Tower.
- 23 Well Tower.
- 24 Armourer's Tower.

- 25 Arthur's, or Northgate.
- 26 King's Kitchen and other Offices.
- 27 Palace, or Subterranean Gate.
- 28 Suffolk's Tower.
- 29 The old Arsenal.
- 30 King Arthur's Hall.
- 31 King's Gate and Bridge.
- 32 Mainmouth's, or Maminot's Towers.

- 33 Arthur's lesser Hall.
- 34 The Palace, or Keep.
- 35 The present Hospital.
- 36 Roman Watch Tower.
- 37 The Old Church.
- 38 Barracks.
- 39 Wells.
- 40 Barbican.

and other ruined walls of the castle. Ten thousand pounds were expended on it by Edward IV. and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, that princess not only bestowed several considerable sums out of her privy purse on its reparation, but also applied to that purpose part of the money raised in the 23d year of her reign by act of parliament, for the cleansing and deepening the harbour.

WAR, time, weather, and neglect have however, much impaired the ancient parts of this fortress. In the year 1722, fifteen hundred French prisoners were confined in the keep; when Dr. Stukeley says, the timber and floors were demolished and taken away. It has since, I believe, been used for the same service, probably with like consequences: and last winter, i. e. 1771, an hundred feet of the south-west or outer wall, next the town, fell down; and about the same time, the chalky foundation of the exterior wall of a battery, formerly called Somerset Mount, was so damaged by the weather, that the guns were removed: the former has been repaired; but for this work, the round tower, commonly called the mill, was pulled down, to the great detriment of the general appearance of the castle.

THIS place was surpris'd for the parliament in 1642. The particulars are thus related by Rushworth; " One Mr. Drake, a merchant, employed for securing Dover castle for the parliament, on Sunday the 21st of August, in the dead of the night, taking about half a score other townsmen with him, climbed up the rock, carrying with them musquets ready charged, and drew up scaling ladders after them, and so got all safe and unperceived over the castle wall, and then marched down to the corps de garde; where they found but four men, which were daunted with their unexpected appearing, and apprehending they might be followed with a greater number, submitted and yielded up their arms without resistance: then Drake and his party went up to the gentleman porter, and demanded the keys of the gates for the use of the king and parliament, telling him they had a warrant so to do; and he refusing, they threatened to break open the door and shoot him; so at last he surrendered the keys, and they turned out the first they

VOL. III,

L

HILL LIBRARY
SAINT PAUL

they met ; and there not being above twenty men in the castle, in a little time they left none there but themselves ; and immediately dispatched an express to the earl of Warwick, who sent them fifty musqueteers, and the city of Canterbury forty more."

IN June, 1648, Sir Richard Hardres, at the head of two thousand men, endeavoured to recover it for the king ; he first possessed himself of the block houses in the town, with the ammunition and ordinance therein deposited, and then fired five hundred shot at the castle ; but on the arrival of Colonel Rich he fled with such precipitation, that he left behind him his artillery and stores.

THE office of constable of the castle, generally joined with that of warden of the cinque ports, has been always bestowed on persons eminent for their rank or abilities ; and more than once on some of the royal family.

TRAVELLERS visiting this place were formerly shewn the arms mentioned by Camden ; great cases of wine, as thick as treacle through age, petrified salt, two very old keys and a brass horn, deemed ensigns of the authority of the constable ; likewise a brass gun, twenty-two feet long, cast, as appears from an inscription on the breech, by Jan Tolhys of Utrecht, 1544, and ludicrously styled Queen Elizabeth's pocket-pistol.—This drawing was made in 1762.

THE MOTE, OR MOTE'S BULWARK, DOVER.

THIS fort was built by King Henry VIII. about the year 1539. It stands on the beach close under the cliff, and beneath the southern end of the west wall of the castle. It was formerly called the Mote Bulwarke, as appears by a note in Peck's Defiderata Curiosa, under the head of Queen Elizabeth's annual expence, civil and military ; wherein one Thomas Parker is stiled captain of the Mote Bulwarke, 1584. From whence it took this name, unless from its smallness, is difficult to conceive ; particularly as there is not the least trace of any moat or ditch about it. Kilburn, whose survey was printed in the year 1659, calls it
Mote's

WASSEL LIII
LIII THAS

Faverham Abbey, Kent.

Mote's Bulwarke. If this is its proper appellation, it may have taken it from the name of the architect who built it, or from that of the first captain by whom it was commanded.

ALTHOUGH it is dependent on the castle, it has its peculiar officers; these are a captain, lieutenant, and master-gunner. It consists of a gate, having rooms over and on both sides of it, a house for the gunner, and a circular stone battery, to which there is a descent by a flight of steps. The entrance is on the east side by a gradual ascent formed out of the chalk. A gunner, who formerly resided here, with great industry embellished the sides of the cliff with several parterres of flowers, which had a very pleasing effect: indeed both the forms and situation of these buildings conspire to render the view extremely picturesque and romantic. — This prospect was taken in the year 1762.

FAVERSHAM ABBEY. (PLATE I.)

THIS abbey was founded and endowed by King Stephen and Maud his Queen, in the 11th, 12th, and 13th years of his reign, A. D. 1147, 1148, and 1149, for the salvation of his soul, the soul of Maud his wife, and of Eustachius their son; also for the souls of their other children, and of his predecessors, kings of England. It was dedicated to the honour of our Holy Saviour.

THE building being finished, the king placed therein Cluniac monks from the abbey of Bermondsey in Surry; the monks of that order being then in high estimation for their sanctity, and the strictness of their rules; But Stephen, unwilling that this his foundation should be subordinate to a foreign abbey, for such that of Cluni was, obtained absolutions from Peter, the abbot of Cluni, and the prior of St. Mary's of Charity, to which Bermondsey was a cell, whereby Clarembald and the twelve monks who came with him were released from their oath of obedience to those houses. These letters were read by Theobald, archbishop of Canterbury, when he gave his benediction to the first abbot, at which solemnity the queen was present; whose attention to the finishing of this house was such, that whilst it was building, she frequently kept her court at the abbey of St. Augustine's in Canterbury, that she might be near at hand to visit the works, and hasten their completion. Hither she used to send for the monk of Christ Church to celebrate divine service to her, silence having been imposed on those of St. Augustine's.
the

As this abbey was a royal foundation, the abbots held their estates in chief, or per baroniam, and were accordingly called to parliament, particularly twelve times in the reigns of Edward I. and II. but never after; for, according to Mr. Selden, about the end of that reign, many of the inferior abbots before summoned were left out, or excluded by discharge.

THE endowments of this monastery were great and various. From the king they held the royal manor of Faversham, which in Domesday Book is thus registered: King William holds Faversham for seven folius, which defends itself. The land is seventeen carrucates, two in demesne. There are thirty villeins, with forty borderers. They have four and twenty carrucates. There are five servants, and one mill of 20s. and two acres of meadow, a wood for an hundred hogs, and of the pasture of wood 31s. 2d. a mercate of four pounds, and two salt works of 3s. 2d. and in the city of Canterbury three houses of twenty pence, pertaining to this manor. In the whole value, in the time of King Edward, it was worth 60l. 5s. at least, and afterwards 60l. it is now worth 80l.

THE villeins here mentioned took their appellation from villanus, a farmer or villager, and were either villeins regardant, that is, annexed to particular estates, as was probably the case in those here mentioned; or in grofs, or at large, and transferable independently from one owner to another. Villeins could not leave their lord without his permission; and if they ran away, or were purloined from him, might be claimed and recovered by action, like beasts or any other chattels. They held, indeed, small portions of land for their support; but it was at the mere will of the lord, who might dispossess them whenever he pleased; and Scale of 40 Rods .

5 10 20 30 40

Flaversham Abbey, Kent.

REFERENCES.

- A. The Abbey Gate next the Town.
- B. The Inner Gate of the Abbey.
- C. The Abbey Farm.

and for this they were bound to perform the meanest services, and these uncertain, both as to time and quantity. A villein could acquire no property either in land or goods; but if he purchased either, the lord might enter upon them, oust the villein, and seize them for his own use, unless he contrived to dispose of them again before the lord seized them. This bondage descended to the children of villeins, who were in the same state of slavery with their parents. The law, however, protected their lives and limbs, as being the king's subjects, so that their lord might not kill or maim them, though he might beat them with impunity. Nor had a female of this order, called a neise, any appeal in case the lord violated her by force. From this state of slavery they might, however, be enfranchised either by deed of manumission from their lord, or by his commencing a law-suit, or binding himself in a bond to them.

THE borderers are said to have been still a lower class, if that can possibly be. They had a bord, or cottage, with a small parcel of land assigned them, on condition of their supplying their lord with poultry, eggs, and other small provisions for his board. The servants were servile tenants or bondsmen, thought by some to be the same with villeins in gross.

FROM the queen this abbey received the manor of Teringes, which was probably afterwards exchanged for some other lands, as it does not appear in the estimate at the dissolution; also an estate purchased of Fulk de Nuenham, called Bordfield and Kingdowne; besides which, divers private persons enriched it with lands, mills, houses, and legacies in money.

THEY had the chapels of Bocton-under-Blean, with the annexed chapel of Herne Hill, and in part the church of Preston in Faverham. Besides all these, it had a benefaction from Godfrey de Bologne, which, though of itself of small apparent value, yet brought the monks many rich offerings: this was a piece of wood pretended to have been part of the true cross.

THEY had all the immunities usually granted to religious houses, except exemption from the archiepiscopal authority; for they were subordinate both to the archbishop and the archdeacon and his official. They had the privilege of sanctuary, of sepulture, and of granting letters of fraternity; but whether the sanctuary extended to more than forty days, is not certain; and their estates were exempted from the jurisdiction of the high-admiral of England.

By the privilege of sanctuary, any felon taking shelter in their monastery, or its precincts, sent notice to the coroner, who thereupon repaired to him, when the felon took the following oath: "Hear ye this, ye justices, or, O ye coroners! I will go out of the kingdom of England, and will not return thither again without the leave of our lord the king, or of his heirs. So God me help!" Whereupon the coroner assigned to the felon a certain port, whither he might freely repair, and whereat he should take shipping, to which he was instantly to set out by the nearest high road; and, as a token of his being under the protection of the church, he carried in his hand a cross. When arrived at the port, he was to embark within two tides; and if he could not procure a passage, or the wind was contrary, he was every day to go into the sea, up to his knees, as a token of essaying to pass over; and if, in the course of forty days from his first taking sanctuary, he could not get a passage, he was then obliged to return again to the church or monastery, and to go through the whole ceremony anew. By a law made in the reign of Henry VIII. it was enacted, that immediately after the confession of any felon taking sanctuary, the coroner should cause to be marked with a hot iron, on the brawn of the thumb of his right hand, the letter A, to the intent it might be known he had abjured the realm. This right of sanctuary extended also to parochial churches and churchyards. Any officer of justice, or others, forcing one of these abjured felons from their sanctuary, or seizing or killing them on the highway, was, by the ordination of Archbishop Boniface, subject to all the penalties of sacrilege.

Of their franchise of sepulture they made great advantage, as under the notion of the extraordinary sanctity of their convent, convent, superstitious persons paid great sums for burial-places there.

THE granting letters of fraternity was another device, by which they gained much money, pretending that the purchasers thereof were made partakers, both during their lives and after their deaths, of the masses, oraisons, fasts, alms, and other pious deeds of the brethren of that house.

AT the dissolution the revenues of this monastery were estimated at 286l. 12s. 6d. and in the 30th of Henry VIII. it was surrendered by John the abbot, and eight monks, to Richard Leyton, archdeacon of Buckingham. The abbot had a pension of one hundred marks per ann. granted him, and the monks an annuity of four or five pounds each. The 31st of Henry VIII. the site was granted to Sir Thomas Cheney and his heirs, who conveyed it five years afterwards to Thomas Arden; whose cruel murder, by the contrivance of his wife, is related at length in Hollinghed's Chronicle, and has furnished subject to two plays; one of ancient date, annually represented at Faversham, the other written by Mr. Lillo. From Arden it came to — Appleford, and from his descendant to Sir George Sondes, of Lees Court.

MR. JACOB, in his history of Faversham, says, "Although the greatest part of these estates were, soon after the dissolution of the abbey, disposed of to different persons; yet the manor and the most considerable part of the site and its demesnes continued in the Crown until the reign of King Charles I. who in his fifth year granted them to Sir Dudley Diggs, of Chilham Castle, master of the Rolls, by whose will they came to his son John Diggs, Esq. who soon after conveyed them to Sir George Sondes, Knight of the Bath, afterwards created baron of Throwleigh, viscount Sondes and earl of Faversham; upon whose death they descended to his only surviving daughter Catherine, married to Lewis Lord Rockingham, afterwards earl of Rockingham, whose eldest son George Lord Sondes, dying in his father's lifetime, they came on the death of his grandfather to the Right Honourable Lewis Earl of Rockingham, who in 1745 dying without issue, was succeeded by his his brother Thomas, earl of Rockingham; upon whose decease, which happened soon after, the present Right Honourable Lewis Lord Sondes became the possessor of them."—This view was drawn anno 1756.

(PLATE II.)

THE following account of the buildings of this house is given by Mr. Lewis in his history thereof.

"BY the little that now remains of the building of this abbey, which is only two gatehouses and a little oratory or chapel, one would guess it to be but of a mean and clumsy structure. At the outer gate was the porter's lodge, and the almonry or aumbry, wherein poor and impotent people were relieved by the charity of the abbey, or rather of those good people who made the religious of this house their trustees to dispose of their alms: the oratory or chapel belonging to this aumbry whither the people here relieved used to resort to perform their devotions, is yet standing in the little meadow, and converted into a stable. The porter's lodge is yet a dwelling house."

Mr. SOUTHOUSE tells us, that in the sacrilegious flood the abbey church, but that it is so totally demolished, that there is not so much as a stone or underpinning left to inform posterity whereabouts it stood; this has tempted me to think that there was really no other church within the precincts of the abbey beside the chapel above-mentioned, whither the convent used to resort for their private devotions; and, that for their more solemn religious services, they made use of the church of our Lady of Charity, the parish church, which stands just by the precincts of the abbey. Robert Fale, sometime of the town of Faversham, of whom was purchased Poyning's Marsh, and thirty-five acres of land in Ewel Field, by his last will bequeaths his body to be buried in the monastery of Faversham, in the chapel of Pietre Rood there; which seems to intimate as if this chapel was the only place in the monastery dedicated to the use of religious worship. Here very probably Faversham Abbey, Kent.

Engraved May 1764 by J. Hooper

P. 100, 101

bably were likewise buried the bodies of King Stephen, and Maude his queen, the founders of this abbey, and of Prince Eustace their son: but of this I pretend not to be certain.

OUR annalist, John Stow, tells us, that at the dissolution of the abbey, the king's body, for the gain of the lead wherein it was confined, was cast into the river; meaning, I suppose by the river, the brackish creek into which a spring or nail-bourne from Ospringe falls, after it has run about two miles at Faversham, where, running by the precincts of the abbey, it passes into the sea: if this be true, I suppose the like impious affront was offered to the ashes of the queen and prince for the same reason. This is not the only instance of the ill effects of avarice at this time, which tempted some men to go beyond their commission, or rather to act without any, to satisfy a greedy humour. For this, in a petition to King Edward VI. from the commissioners several years after, I find a complaint made, that the hospital of St. Bartholomew near Dover, and the church of the same, were taken down by John Boule without commission; and that the same John Boule had then in his hands the church-yard of St. John's Church in Dover, with the stones of that and two other churches, viz. St. Martin's and St. Nicholas, which were then demolished. This is the only instance that I have met with, if even this may be depended on, of the graves of the dead being plundered at that time.

NEXT was the firmory, or building where those of the convent were laid who were sick. It was punishable for any to eat in this place who was not solemnly designed for it.

THE refectory or hall, called also the Fraytoure, where the monks used to dine and sup. This is one of these halls described in Pierce the Plowman's Creed:

“ An halle for an hygh kynge, an houshold to holden,
With brode bordes abouten ybenched well clene,
With wyndoes of gloas wrought as a chirche.”

MR. SOUTHOUSE tells us, that in his time this building remained entire, and that on the north door was this inscription in old English characters, "Jefus Chrif have mercy on us!" but that Sir George Sondes quite demolifhed it before the year 1676.

ON the east part of this refectory flood the abbot's lodge, as fhould feem by its convenient fituation for the fupervifing that place; in Mr. Southouse's time an ancient chamber or two of this building were yet remaining, whose roofs were cieled with oaken wainfcot, after the manner of fome chancels. On the weft fide of this refectory flood a building of ftone, which opened with two doors into the refectory, and with another into the clofe northward, which Mr. Southouse gueffed to be the interlocutory or parlour, whither the monks ufed to retire after meals.

THE kitchen, which is now totally razed, flood, Mr. Southouse fays, contiguous to the well, and in it there was a mantle-piece of timber thirty feet in length. The foundation of it was of ftone, which was dug up in the year 1652 to help pave the broad ftreet in the town, commonly called Court-ftreet; and as the labourers were digging, an arched vault under ground was difcovered, which ferved as a drain or fewer to convey the water or fullage from the kitchen.

THERE was likewife a room called the calefactory, where the monks ufed to warm themfelves: to this purpofe Robert Fale afore-mentioned devifed by his will, dated 21 Henry VIII. eight loads of wood a-year for the ufe of the monks in this place.

BESIDES thefe buildings there was the bake-houfe, malt-houfe, brew-houfe, and cellar, the tattered fkeletons of fome of which Mr. Southouse fays were in being in his time.

THE ftables belonging to the abbey flood in the place now called the Abbey-clofe, at fome diftance from the other offices: among thefe was one called the Palfrey-ftable, which was for the pads and faddle-horfes of the abbot. This ftable, Mr. Southouse fays, flood on the ground where Sir George Sondes built the farm-houfe that now is.

THERE

THERE was also a room for a library, in which Leland tells us were these following manuscripts :

Rabani [Mauri] super Mattheum.
 Enchyridion Xysti.
 Prefectinus super Libros Sententiarum.
 Giraldi Cambrensis Topographia [Hiberniæ]
 Iidius Solinus [Polyhistor. seu de Mirabilibus Mundi.]
 Chronicon Gulielmi Medunensis.
 Epistola Othonis Monachi de Inventione Corporis S.
 Milburgæ Micarcula quæ Autore Deo.

THE following list of abbots is given in Mr. Jacob's History of Faverham, and is, he says, more correct than any that hath appeared, being improved from the records of the town :

1.	Clarembald,	—	—	1147
2.	Guericus,	—	—	1178
3.	Algarus,	—	—	1188
4.	Nicholas,	—	—	1214
5.	Geofroy,	—	—	1237
6.	Peter de Lindestede,	—	—	1244
7.	Ioh. de Hofapuldre,	—	—	1267
8.	Peter de Erdclose, alias Hardello,	—	—	1270
9.	Peter de Rodmersham,	—	—	1272
10.	John de Romenhale,	—	—	1274
11.	Ofward de Estry,	—	—	1275
12.	Geoffroy de Broton,	—	—	1292
13.	Clement,	—	—	1305
14.	Thomas de Wengham,	—	—	1319
15.	John de Lye,	—	—	1326
16.	John,	—	—	1355
17.	William de Maydestan,	—	—	1363
18.	Robert de Faverham,	—	—	1369
19.	Robert de Elham,	—	—	1400

20. John

- | | | | |
|-----|--------------------------------|-----|------|
| 20. | John de Chartham, | — | 1427 |
| 21. | Walter Gore, | — — | 1458 |
| 22. | Joh. Sheepey, alias Castlocke, | | 1499 |
- Who resigned the abbey.

THIS view represents the northernmost gate, as viewed from the south: it was drawn anno 1758.—This gate was lately taken down.

H A L L I N G H O U S E .

THIS was one of the four houses formerly belonging to the bishops of Rochester; it is pleasantly situated on the western banks of the river Medway, about three miles south of Rochester.

WHEN or by whom it was built, is not known; that the bishops of Rochester had a house here, in the time of King Henry II. appears from the following story, related by Godwin, in the life of Richard, then archbishop of Canterbury:

“THE end of this man is thus reported; how that being asleep at his manor of Wrotham, there seemed to come unto him a certaine terrible personage, demanding of him who he was; whereupon, when for fear, the archbishop answered nothing; Thou are he (quoth the other) that hast destroyed the goods of the church, and I will destroy thee from of the earth: This having said he vanished away. In the morning betime, the archbishop got him up, and taking his journey toward Rochester, related this fearful vision unto a friend of his by the way.

HE had no sooner told the tale, but he was taken suddenly with a great cold and stiffness in his limbs, so that they had much ado to get him so farre as Halling, a house belonging to the bishop of Rochester; there he took to his bed, and being horribly tormented with the cholike and other greifs until the next day, the night following the 16th of February, he gave up the ghost, anno 1183. His body was carried to Canterbury, and honourably interred in the Lady Chappell.”

LAURENTIUS

Halling House, Kent.

Pub. by J. & W. 1864, by S. Hooper.

LAURENTIUS DE SANCTO MARTINO, chaplain and counsellor to King Henry III. some time resided at this place. Harris, author of the History of Kent, was possessed of an ancient deed, executed here by that bishop, who was consecrated in the year 1250, and died in 1274.

KILBURNE, in his Survey, says this house was built by Hamo de Heth, confessor to King Edward II. and bishop of this diocese. But herein he is mistaken, as is evident, not only from the aforementioned anecdotes, but also from the account given by Godwyn, in his life of that prelate; wherein he says, "He built much at Halling, the yeere 1323, to wit, the hall and high front of the bishop's place there, now standing: re-edified the wall at Holborough, near unto it, and repaired the rest of the buildings in the same house."

MR. HASTED in his History of Kent, says he rebuilt the hall, at the cost of 120*l.* the lofty front of the palace and great part of the walls, the chapel and the dining room.

HERE was a vineyard from which, according to Lambard, when King Edward II. was at Bokinfold, Hamo de Heth sent him a present both of wine and grapes.

THIS is likewise confirmed by the ingenious Lambard, author of the Perambulation of Kent, who dwelt some time in this mansion, but with this difference, that he says, it was a mill which the bishop rebuilt at Holborough; and more clearly expresses, that this bishop, besides erecting the parts here mentioned, repaired the other buildings of Halling House; which Godwyn, by his manner of wording, has made somewhat obscure and doubtful.

WHEN Harris wrote his history of this county, which was published anno 1719, many fragments of this house were standing; particularly the chapel, part of the hall, and a gate, with the arms of the fee of Rochester in stone.

ITS state, in the year 1759, when this drawing was taken, may be better collected from the view, than expressed by words. It has since been totally destroyed for the sake of the materials.

THERE was likewise remaining here, till about the year 1720, in a niche over the outside of the chief door, a stone statue of Hamo de Heth, dressed in his episcopal robes; about two feet high, and elegantly finished. It was then blown down by a storm, but luckily escaped damage by falling upon some grass; and was, by the late Doctor Thorpe, of Rochester, preserved, and presented to Dr. Atterbury, then bishop of that see.

CLOSE to it stands the parish church, which is likewise here delineated. It is dedicated to St. John the Baptist; is in the diocese and deanry of Rochester, a vicarage, and valued in the king's books at 7l. 13s. 4d. per annum.

THE manor of Halling or Haling, which in Saxon signifies the wholesome low place or meadow, was granted to the see of Rochester, according to Lambard, (Harris has it, to the priory of that town) anno 838, by Egbert, king of Kent. Of the witnessing this deed, the former of these writers mentions this curious particular: "I have seen (says he) in an auncient booke, containing the donations to the see of Rochester, collected by Ernulphus, the bishop there, and intituled Textus de Ecclesia Roffensi, a chartre of Ecgbert, (the fourth christened king of Kent) by the which he gave to Dioram, the bishop of Rochester, tenne plough landes in Halling, together with certaine denes in the weald or common wood. To the which chartre, there is (amongst others) the subscription of Jeanbert, the archbishop; and of one Heahbert, a king of Kent also, as he is in that booke tearmed: which thing I note for two speciall causes; the one to shewe, that about that age, there were at one time in Kent, more kings than one. The other to manifest and set forth the manner of that time, in signing and subscribing of deedes and chartres, a fashion much different from the insealing that is used in these our daies: and, as touching the first, I myself would have thought that the name of King had, in that place, been but only the title of a second magistrate (as prorox or viceroi) substituted under the very king of the country, for administration of justice in his aid or absence; saving that I reade plainly in another chartre, of another donation
of

Pub. by S. Hooper.

Ket's Coity House, Kent.

of Elfingham (made by Offa, the king of Mercia, to Eardulfe, the bishop of the same see) that he proceeded in that his gift, by the consent of the same Heahbert, the king of Kent; and that one Sigaered also (by the name of Rex dimidiæ partis provinciæ Cantuariorum) both confirmed it by writing, and gave possession by the deliverie of a clod of earth, after the manner of seison that wee yet use. Neither was this true in Heahbert onley; for it is evident, by fundry chartres extant in the same booke, that Ealbert, the king of Kent, had Ethelbert (another king) his fellow and partner; who also, in his time, was joined in reigne with one Eardulfe, that is called Rex Cantuariorum, as well as he: so that for this reason it should seeme, that either the kingdom was divided by descent, or els that the title was litigious and in controversie, though our histories (so farre as I have seene) have mention of neither."

HARRIS says; that, at the general dissolution of religious houses, this manor was settled by Henry VIII. as part of the revenue of his new cathedral and collegiate church of Rochester; and is now in the possession of the Dean and Chapter of that church.

KET'S COITY HOUSE.

THIS is one of those ancient sepulchral monuments so frequently to be found all over these kingdoms, but more particularly in Wales and the county of Cornwall: indeed, they are not peculiar to the Britons, but common to all the northern nations. In the Antiquities of Sweden and Norway, many of them are there represented; and several are said to remain in Denmark: nor were they confined to these countries only; there being one of them in Minorca, which is engraved in Armstrong's History of that island.

IT stands on the side of a hill, a mile and a half east of Aylesford, and a quarter of a mile to the westward of the great road leading from Rochester to Maidstone; and was erected over the grave

grave of Catigern, brother to Gourtimer, or Vortimer, prince of the Britons; who was slain, in a battle fought with the Saxons, near Aylesford, in the year 455; in which Horfa, one of the Saxon generals, likewise fell, and was buried at a neighbouring place, probably from him since called Horsted.

PERHAPS the appellation of Ket's Coity House may be thus illustrated: Ket, or Cat, is possibly the familiar abbreviation of Catigern; and in Cornwall, where there are many of these monuments, those stones whose length and breadth greatly exceed their thickness, are called Coits: Kit's Coity House may then express—Catigern's House built with Coits; and might have been a taunting reflection on the sepulchre of that champion for the British liberty, used by the Saxons when in possession of the county of Kent.

THIS monument is composed of four large stones, of that sort called Kentish Rag (a): three of them are set upright in the ground, enclosing three sides of a square, and fronting the north, west, and south points; the fourth, which is the largest, is laid transversely over, and serves as a covering, but does not touch the south stone. It is not parallel to the horizon, but inclines towards the west, in an angle of about nine degrees; owing to the west or end stone, on which it rests, being somewhat shorter than the other supporter. Perhaps the east end, now open, was once also enclosed; as, at about seventy yards to the north-west, lyes another stone of the same kind and form as those standing.

(a) AN anonymous correspondent has favoured the author with the following observations on his account of this monument:

"I DOUBT whether they are rag stones, and am rather inclined to think they are of the pebble kind, as there are a great many of that sort in the neighbourhood of Ket's Coit House. Between Boxley Hill and Sandling, several lye on the side of the road; in a field below Ket's Coit House westward, lye several together, perhaps another monument fallen down: several lye in the homefall at Mr. Taylor's farm in Aylesford parish, and in other places in that parish; probably they were met with in the chalk cliffs, with which Boxley Hill abounds, there appearing such a stone in its natural bed, at the top of Boxley Hill, close to the road. With respect to the distance of the nearest quarry, Mr. Grose is mistaken, there having been quarries of rag stone worked as presumed for some centuries at Sandling and Allington, not two miles distance; and the quarries at Allington are still in full work."

THE

THE dimensions of these stones are as follows: that on the south side, is eight feet high, seven and a half broad, and two thick; it weighs about eight tons: that on the north is eight feet in height, as many broad, and two thick; its weight, eight tons and a half: the west, or end stone, is extremely irregular: its medium measure is five feet in length, the same in breadth, and in thickness fourteen inches; it weighs about two tons; the transverse, or impost, is likewise very irregular; its length eleven, breadth eight, and thickness two feet; and it weighs about ten tons, seven hundred. None of these stones have the least mark of any workmanship. The nearest quarry, and from which they were in all likelihood taken, is at the distance of about six miles.

“AT the distance of two fields southward from the monument in the bottom nearer to Aylesford, is a heap of the like kind of stones, some of which are partly upright, and others laying in a circle round them, in all to the number of nine or ten. Those that are partly upright, with a large one lying across over them, appear to have once formed a like kind of structure as that of Ket's Coity House, and to have fronted towards the same aspect; the whole is now intergrown with elms and other coppice shrubs: was I not deterred by the similarity of the name, and were there not so many respectable opinions, that Horsted was the place where Horsa the Saxon general was buried, I should be much inclined to think that Ket's Coity House, and this last mentioned, were the monuments of the two chiefs, who fell by each others hand in this engagement. They were undoubtedly built for the same purposes, but like many others of the same appearance in different parts of England, are of such high antiquity as to be spoken of by our earliest historians as things beyond tradition, the use of which could be even in their time but barely conjectured.

THIS monument of antiquity is reported to have been demolished by some persons digging a trench underneath it, in expectation of finding either treasure or remains of antiquity, and the trench being left open, an elm tree grew up in it, and by degrees raised the stones, and threw them to the ground. Some years ago there was found in this field, a spur of a very antique form, with a remarkable long sprig and large rowel, and the handle and small part of the blade of a very ancient sword. Haisted's Kent, vol. II. p. 179.—This drawing was made in the year 1760.

L E E D S C A S T L E.

THIS castle stands near the middle of the county, about three miles and a half south-east of Maidstone. Here was formerly a castle, according to Kilburn, built about the year 857, by one Ledian a Saxon, chief counsellor to King Ethelbert II. which was afterwards destroyed by the Danes. After the Conquest, the site, with other lands, being allotted to Sir Hugh (Philipot calls him Hamo) de Creveceur, one of the eight captains or deputy-governors of Dover Castle, he, anno 1071, began to rebuild this castle, which was finished by Adam, his grandson, who made it his capital seat; also that of the barony of Chatham: from being environed with water, it was sometimes stiled the Moat.

THIS Hugh, or Hamo, married the daughter and heiress of William de Averrenches, baron of Folkestone, and by her had Robert de Creveceur, who, by engaging with the barons, forfeited his estate to the Crown, where it remained till the reign of Henry III. when that prince granted it, together with the manor, to Robert de Leyborne, in exchange for some lands in Trottscliffe, in this county. A record in the Tower says, Robert de Creveceur gave the castle and manor to Robert de Leyborne. This, Harris supposes he was, after the grant, prevailed upon to do by the grantee, whose title thereby became incontestible.

LAMBARD, who makes one Robert the builder of the castle, thinks that it was destroyed at the dispossession of the Creveceurs. His words are: "For I have read that Edward (then prince of Wales, and afterwards the first king of that name, being wardiene of the five ports, and constable of Dover, in the life of Henry III.
his

Lead's Castle, Kent.

Godfrey Sculp.

his father caused Henry Cobham, whose ministerie he used, as a substitute in both those offices) to race the castle that Robert de Crevequer had erected, because Crevequer (that was the owner of it, and heire to Robert) was of the number of the nobles that moved and maintained warre against him; which whither it be true or no I will not affirme, but yet I think it very likely, bothe bicause Bedlesmere (a man of another name) became lord of Leeds shortly after, as you shall anone see, and also for that the present work at Leeds pretendeth not the antiquitie of so many yeeres, as are passed since the age of the Conquest."

ANNO 1299, 27th of Edward I. this castle and manor, then valued at 21l. 6s. 8d. was settled on Queen Margaret, as part of her dower.

It soon after reverted to the Crown; and Edward II. in the 10th year of his reign; granted both it and the manor, with the advowson of Leeds Priory, to Bartholomew, Lord Badlesmere, son of Gunceline, chief justice of Chester, temp. Edward I. This Bartholomew, with his brother Ralph de Badlesmere, accompanied King Richard I. into the Holy Land, and was present at the siege of Acon; he was possessed of a vast estate in this county, owning the barony of Fitz Bernard at Kerpdowen, Tong and Chilham castles, Ridlingwold and Hothfield. His destruction is commonly said to have been brought about by the following affair, the particulars of which is thus related by Thomas de la Moore, a noble person, who lived in the same age: "In the year 1321 came Queen Isabel to the castle of Leeds about Michaelmas, where she had designed to lodge all night, but was not suffered to enter. The king highly resenting this, as done in contempt of him, called together some neighbouring inhabitants out of Essex and London, and gave them orders to besiege the castle. Bartholomew de Badlesmere was he who owned it, and having left his wife and sons in it, was gone with the rest of the barons to spoil the estate of Hugh de Spencer. The besieged in the mean time despairing of succour, the barons with their associates, came as far as Kingston, and with the mediation of the bishops of Canterbury bury and London, and the Earl of Pembroke, petitioned the King to raise the siege, promising to surrender the castle into his hands after the next parliament; but the King, considering that the besieged could not hold out long, and moreover incensed at this their contumacy, would not listen to the petition of the barons. After they had dispersed themselves to other parts, he gained the castle, though with no small difficulty; and sending his wife and sons to the Tower of London, hanged the rest that were in it."— Among these was, it is said, Sir Thomas Culpeper, the castellan.

THE story is very differently stated in Leland's Collectanea, vol. I. p. 273, where it is said, the King sent the Queen to Leeds castle, in order to be revenged of Badlesmere for a disturbance raised at Canterbury; though more probably for his association with the other barons against his favourite. Indeed, it was an admirable expedient to find a pretext to ruin him: if entrance was denied her, he might be punished for disrespect; and if she had been admitted, probably the castle would have been seized by her retinue. That it was then unprovided for defence, may be gathered from the same passage in Leland, where it is said, Badlesmere detached not only soldiers, but also a constable to command them. This lord being the year following taken prisoner, at Boroughbridge, was beheaded at Canterbury.

AFTER his execution the castle and manor escheated to the Crown, which, notwithstanding his son Giles de Badlesmere obtained restitution of most of his father's other possessions, were never restored to him, but remained as part of the royal revenue. In the year 1359, when the buildings were in a most ruinous state, that munificent prelate and able architect, William of Wickham, being appointed by King Edward III. chief warden and surveyor of this and divers other royal castles, he so repaired and improved it, that King Richard II. was frequently induced to visit it, particularly in the 19th year of his reign: several instruments signed by him that year are dated at his castle of Leeds. And King Henry IV. in the 2d year of his reign, resided here part of the month of April, on account of a terrible plague which then raged

raged in London, and swept away thirty thousand inhabitants. The similitude of names has caused Fabian and others to mistake this castle for that of Leeds in Yorkshire, and to mention it as the place of imprisonment of Richard II: the following extract from John Harding's Chronicle, p. cxcviii. will point out the error, for which purpose it is cited in the preface to Thoresby's Leeds:

“The kyng then sent Kyng Richard to Ledes
There to be kepte surely in privetee
For thens after, to Pykeryng went he nedes
And to Knavesburgh, after led was he
But to Pountfrete last, where he did die.”

ALL these castles are in Yorkshire, and not far distant one from the other.

RICHARD ARUNDEL, archbishop of Canterbury, procured a grant of this castle in the reign of Henry IV. and frequently resided here, particularly whilst the process against the Lord Cobham was carrying forward; and some of his instruments were dated from his castle of Leeds, in the year 1413, being that in which he died. On his death it reverted again to the Crown, and became accounted one of the king's houses; many of the principal gentry of the county being intrusted with the custody of it.

IN the 7th of King Henry V. Joane of Navarre, the second queen of the late King Henry IV. being accused of conspiring against the life of the king her son-in-law, was committed to Leeds Castle, there to abide during the king's pleasure; and being afterwards put into the custody of Sir John Pelham, he removed her to Pevensey Castle, in Suffex.

IN the 18th of Henry VI. Archbishop Chicheley sat at the King's Castle of Leeds, in the process against Eleanor, dutchess of Gloucester, accused of forcery and witchcraft.

IN the time of King Edward IV. Ralph St. Leger was made constable, and had one of the parks annexed to his grant; and in the reign of Henry VII. it being then much run to ruin, was re-edified by Sir Henry Guildeford (probably constable thereof) at the king's charge.

IN the reign of Edward VI. the fee-simple, which from the execution of Badlesmere till then had remained in the Crown, was granted by that king in the 4th year of his reign, to Sir Anthony St. Leger, then lord-deputy of Ireland, who had done great services in that kingdom. His grandson, Sir Warham St. Leger, sold it to Sir Anthony Smith, of whose daughters it was purchased by Sir Thomas Culpeper, of Holingbourne, who settled it on his son, Sir Charles Culpeper.

IT afterwards came by marriage into the family of the Lord Fairfax: his brother, Robert Fairfax, Esq. late knight of the shire for the county, is the present proprietor.

ON the 3d of November, 1779, his Majesty King George III. with his queen lodged here, after having reviewed the army encamped at Coxheath.

THE following description of this castle is given by Mr. Haisted in his History of Kent: "Leeds Castle is a most magnificent pile of building, being all built of stone at several times, and of different architecture; notwithstanding which it has altogether a fine effect, and at once strikes the beholder with admiration and pleasure.

IT is situated in the midst of a beautiful park, the view of which implants in the mind an idea of the noble and great, and is incircled by a large moat of running water, which is supplied by a stream that rises at Lenham, and flows from hence into the river Medway. In this water there is a great plenty of fish, especially pike, which are so large, as frequently to weigh between thirty and forty pounds.

AT the entrance to the castle, are the remains of an ancient gateway, which has been pulled down to within about a yard of the ground; what is left shews it to have been very strong; the grove for the portcullis is still remaining. A little to the north-west of it, is the ruin of a very ancient building, probably belonging

R. Godfrey Sc.

Leibourn Castle, Kent. Pl. 1.

Engraved by J. Hopper.

ing to one of the inferior officers, whose post was near the gate of the castle.

THE approach to the castle is over a stone bridge of two arches, and under another ancient gateway, which with the post already described, seems to have been part of the old fortrefs built by the Creveceurs, and not demolished at the time the rest of it was.

WITHIN the last-mentioned gate is a handsome quadrangle or court, and on the right hand a building, which seems by the architecture to be of the time of William of Wickham, and might be part of what he erected here. That part at the further side of the square, opposite the entrance, contains the state or principal apartments, which has had a handsome uniform front of rustic stone-work added to it; the windows of it, though fashioned, are arched in the Gothic taste, and the parapet is embattled: behind this building, over a bridge of two arches, formerly a draw-bridge, but now built on and enclosed, as a passage, there is a large building, being the extremity of the castle; this is a handsome structure of slightly workmanship, intended no doubt both for beauty and strength, and seems to be of the age of Henry VIII; if so, in all likelihood it was erected by Sir Henry Guildford, Knt. who was constable of it in that reign, and as has been already mentioned, re-edified this castle at the king's charge. The site of this building, from the strength and situation of the place, was most probably where the antient keep of the castle was formerly placed.—This drawing, which represents the back part of the castle, was made anno 1762.

LEIBOURN CASTLE. (PLATE I.)

THIS castle takes its name from the parish and manor of Laborne, or Leibourn, wherein it stands; and which is situated towards the middle of the western part of Kent, near the river Medway, and about a mile north of Town or West Malling. Of this place Kilburn gives the following account: " Sir William Arfick (one of the eight chief captains or lieutenant-governors of Dover Castle, in the time of William the Conqueror) was the owner of Leibourn; and in the same was a castle, of which the Lord Leibourn, an ancient and eminent family there, was owner. This parish ought anciently to have contributed towards the repair of the fifth arch or pier of Rochester Bridge."
Dover

PHILLIPOT says, that it was built by some of that family, and was esteemed anciently a place of strength; but doth not carry its age higher than King Richard I. at which time Roger de Leibourn was one of the Kentish knights who accompanied that king to the Holy Land, and served at the siege of Acon in Palestine.

IN the 21st year of King Edward I. William de Leibourn claimed free warren and other privileges of a manor for his estate here, before the Justices Itinerant for the county.

IN this family it continued till the 43d year of King Edward III. when Inliana, daughter to Roger de Leibourn, the last heir-male, being first married to John de Hastings, and afterwards to William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, surviving both, and dying without issue, the manor and castle escheated to the Crown; and was, by King Richard II. in the 9th year of his reign, granted to Sir Simon de Burleigh, lord-warden of the Cinque-Ports; but he being not long after attainted of high treason, it reverted to the Crown; and was, by the same king, in the twelfth year of his reign, granted to the abbey of Grace, on Tower-hill, London; where it continued till the general suppression of religious houses.

AT the dissolution, in the 37th year of the reign of King Henry VIII. it was granted to Sir Edward North, who not long after sold it to Robert Godden, whose arms were in 1719 remaining in the glass windows; he afterwards disposed of it to Sir John Lawfon, who conveyed it to Henry Clerk, serjeant at law, and recorder of the city of Rochester; in his family it continued for some time, till his grandson sold it to Captain William Saxby, of the Grange in this parish, whence it passed by sale in September, 1724, to Francis Whitworth, Esq. who dying in March, 1742, was succeeded in this estate by his son Charles, afterwards Sir
Charler

L. Ellis, sc.

Leibourn Castle, Kent. Pl. 2.

Pub. by J. & J. Hooper.

Charles Whitworth, Knt. lieutenant-governor of Gravesend and Tilbury Forts; who in 1776, conveyed it by sale to James Hawley, M. D. and F. R. S. who died possessed of it, December 22d, 1777; his son, Henry Hawley of the Grange in this parish, Esq; is the present owner of this castle, and also of the manor and advowson of the rectory of Leybourne.

IN 1750, when this view was taken, which represents the inside of the castle, very little of the old building remained, except some pieces of round towers, and the ancient door, or gate. By the foundations of the ruined walls, and the traces of the ditch, it appears, that this castle was not very large. The mansion, which seems of later date, was then converted into a farm-house.

(PLATE II.)

THE front, or chief entrance into this castle, together with the ancient gate, and the remains of two towers, are here delineated. Over the gate was a machicolation or contrivance, from whence, in case of a sudden attack, great stones, boiling water, or melted lead, might be thrown down on the heads of the assailants.

THERE are also some fragments of arches and walls still in being: by the remaining foundations and the traces of the ditch, this castle does not appear to have been very large. On the remains of it many years ago, a dwelling house was built, which is said to have been for some generations the habitation of a gentleman's family, one of whom, Thomas Golding, Esq. here kept his shrievalty for this county, in the year 1703; but it has been for many years past converted to a farm-house.—This view was taken in the year 1759.

LYME CASTLE.

LIMPNE, Limn, or Lyme Hill, is situated towards the south part of the county, about two miles west of Hythe. On the summit of this hill, commanding an extensive prospect of Romney Marsh and the sea, stands the ancient castelated mansion of the archdeacons of Canterbury, built, as is conjectured by Lambard and others, out of the ruins of Stutfall Castle, some low walls of which are still standing, about two hundred yards south of, and below the hill. Here was formerly the famous Portus Lemanus, now abandoned by the sea.

WHEN or by whom this edifice was erected, is not mentioned either by Lambard, Somner, or Harris. It has, however, great marks of antiquity, as has also the adjoining church; one of which is its west door. This church is dedicated to St. Stephen, and A. D. 1379, was valued at 20l. per ann. after the tenths were taxed. Harris says, "This building seems to have been formerly much larger. In the church are several old tomb stones with crosses on them, which perhaps belonged to some of the hermits of the chapel here at Court-street."

THE following description of this place is given by Leland in his Itinerary, vol. vii. p. 141, b.

"LYMNE HILLE, or Lyme, was sumtyme a famosē haven, and good for shyppes that myght cum to the foote of the hille. The place ys yet cawled Shypwey and Old Haven. Farther, at this day the lord of the five portes kepeth his principal cowrt a little by est from Lymme Hil. Ther remayneth, at this day, the ruines of a stronge fortresse of the Britons, hanging on the hil, and cummyng down to the very fote. The cumpase of the fortresse seemeth to be ten acres, and be lykelyhod yt had sum wall beside that streechid up to the very top of the hille, wher now ys the paroch chirche, and the archidiacon's house of Cantorbury. The old walles are made of Britons brikes, very large and great flynt set together almost indissolubely with morters made of smawle pybble.

Lyme Castle, Kent.
Printed May 1784 by J. Hooper

Pub. 20 Sept. 1784, by J. S. Hooper.

Mary (St.) & all Saints College, Kent.

Godfrey &c

pybble. The walles be very thicke, and yn the west end of the castel appereth the base of an old towre. About this castel yn time of mind, were found antiquities of money of the Romaynes. Ther as the chirch is now was sumtyme without fayle an abbay. The graves yet appere yn the chirch, and of the lodging of the abbay be now converted into the archidiacon's house, the wich ys made like a castelet embatelyd."

THIS mansion at present is converted into a farm-house.—This view was drawn anno 1772.

ST. MARY AND ALL-SAINTS' COLLEGE, MAIDSTONE.

THIS college stands on the eastern bank of the river Medway, a small distance south of the parish church: it was built by Archbishop Courtney, who had a licence from King Richard II. in the nineteenth year of his reign, anno 1396, empowering him to convert the parish church of St. Mary, at Maidstone, into a collegiate church, having one master or warden, and as many chaplains and ministers as he should deem proper, who were thereby endowed with the advowson and patronage of the said church, with the chapels of Loose and Debtling: as also the new-work, or hospital of St. Peter and Paul, at Maidstone, built anno 1260, by Archbishop Boniface; together with the patronage of the churches of Sutton, Lillington (perhaps Lullingston) and Farley, thereunto belonging. To this appropriation, Somner says, Adam Mottrum, archdeacon of Canterbury, gave his consent. How such consent was necessary, does not appear.

THE same king, by another charter, granted to this college the advowson of the church of Crundale, near Wye, in this county, with the reversion of the manors of Tremworth and Fannes, in the same parish; which were held by Henry Yevele, for his life: and King Henry IV. in the 8th year of his reign, gave his licence to the master and chaplains, to purchase the manor of Wyghtesham, (probably Witresham, in this county) pursuant to their charter, chartre, whereby they were authoris'd to buy lands to the value of 40*l.* per annum.

THOUGH this college is generally suppos'd to stand on the site of the hospital of St. Peter and St. Paul, yet, according to the opinion of Newton, who wrote the antiquities of Maidstone, it is not the fact. His dissention is founded on the following reasons: first, that it appears more probable, from the words of the grant or licence, that this hospital stood in the West Borough; and besides, when it is considered that Courtney had not the grant of it till the last year of his life, it is not likely he should have been able to pull it down, and erect the present building in so short a time. He rather supposes that this college was built some time before, on the archbishop's own lands, or the demesnes of the manor; after which, he obtained the hospital of the king, as an accession to its revenues.

To defray his expences in this foundation, Courtney had recourse, says the author before cited, to the arts of his predecessors, who were us'd to make others pay for the charities of which they assumed the merit; and accordingly procur'd a licence from the pope, to gather 4*d.* in the pound out of all ecclesiastical preferments within his province. The bishop of Lincoln refused to collect it in his diocese, and appeal'd to the pope; but whilst the appeal was depending, the archbishop died.

THIS college seems (says Newton) to have been dissolved about the year 1538; according to Tanner, it was, by that king granted to the Lord Cobham. Its value, as stated by Leland, was 212*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* per annum, in the whole, and 139*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* clear. But both Dugdale and Speed estimate it at 159*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* Kilburn says it was dedicated to the honour of All Saints; and to these, Tanner prefixes St. Mary. The gate or entrance is still remaining, with other parts of the building sufficient to shew it was once a handsome structure. It is at present converted into a farm-house; and, with the lands about it, to a considerable value, is part of the estate of Lord Romney.

THE

THE church is likewise a very good piece of Gothic architecture : it was either rebuilt, or much repaired, by Archbishop Courtney, who therein lyes buried.

WARDENS, OR MASTERS, of this COLLEGE.

1. JOHN WOTTON. He was rector of Staplehurst, in this county, canon of Chichester, and one of Archbishop Courtney's executors. He died the last day of October, 1417, and was buried in this church, with an inscription on his tomb, which is now gone, but was preserved by Weaver in his account of Funeral Monuments. He is mentioned in Rymer's Fæd. tom. ix. page 117.

2. ROGER HERON. In the List of the Gentlemen of Kent, 12th of Henry II. 1434, we find Rogeri Heron, Magistri Coll. de Maydestone : and he occurs master, 1438.

3. THOMAS BOLEYN, L.L. B. 1459.

4. THOMAS PRESTON succeeded in 1470, and held that office in 1476.

5. JOHN COMBERTON, A. M. In the additions to Tanner he is called William, and said to have died in 1506.

6. WILLIAM GROCYN, S. T. B. admitted April 17, 1506, or (as Wood says) about 1504. He was born at Bristol, educated at Wykeham's School, near Winchester, and afterwards fellow of New College, Oxford. He is said to have been one of the greatest scholars of his time, excellent in the knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages, and a familiar friend of the learned Erasmus. He died in either the year 1519 or 1520, aged about 80 years, and was buried at the stall end of the choir of this collegiate church.

7. JOHN PENYTON, A. M. Haisted says he succeeded anno 1522.

8. JOHN LEFEE, Luffee, or Leys, (his name being thus differently spelt) was the last master, and at the dissolution had a pension assigned him of 48l. 16s. 8d. which it appears he lived to enjoy in 1553. He is mentioned in Wood's Fasti. Oxon. vol. i. p. 29.

At the same time annual pensions were granted to the persons following, as fellows, chaplains, or otherwise members of this college :

	l.	s.	d.		l.	s.	d.
John Godfrey -	6	13	8	John Weston -	2	13	4
George Denham -	6	0	0	William Clark -	2	13	4
Thomas Wade -	5	0	0	John Huggard -	2	6	8
John Porter -	5	0	0	James Ware -	2	6	8
Arthur Butler -	4	0	0	James Killigrew -	2	0	0
Thomas Pyne -	4	0	0	William Ryle -	1	6	8
George Prior -	4	0	0	John Pytteste -	1	6	8
Arthur Burton -	2	13	4

THIS drawing was made in the year 1760.

ST. MARTIN'S PRIORY, OR THE NEWARKE,
DOVER. (PLATE I.)

BEFORE the year 640, King Eadbald built a chapel within the walls of his castle of Dover, wherein he placed a college of twenty-four secular canons ; but about the year 686, according to the Monasticon, or 696, as Tanner has it, these canons encumbering the garrison, and becoming extremely troublesome, by their irregular behaviour, particularly in coming in and going out at all hours, Wictred, king of Kent, fearful this might be attended with danger to the castle, built St. Martin's Church in Dover, some small remains of which are still visible near the market place, and placed them therein, granting them all the privileges and immunities they had enjoyed whilst in the castle ; among which was an independency from all jurisdiction and visitation, except from the court of Rome, and that of himself or his successors only.

HERE they remained four hundred years, and there being no other church than that of St. Martin, they built three others for parochial service, which churches were afterwards chapels, dependent

St Martin's Priory, or the Newarke, Dover, Kent.

Pub. 28 May 1784 by S. Hooper

S. Hooper sc.

dent on the monastery. At length these canons being screened by their immunities from all but the royal authority, grew so licentious, that they violated both maids and married women, with impunity, both within and without the town; and committed so many excesses of all kinds, that in the 24th of the reign of Henry I. Richard Corboil, archbishop of Canterbury, complained of them to that king; and represented to him, that on account of their privileges, a stop to those irregularities could only be effected by the immediate interposition of the royal authority; and further added, that if his majesty did not immediately restrain and punish them, he himself would be culpable before God, for their misdeeds.

THIS had such an effect, that in the year 1130, Henry being present at the dedication of Christ Church, Canterbury, gave to the Archbishop, and his successors, the church of St. Martin at Dover, with all their possessions, directing him to place therein religious persons, who should serve God and sing masses for the benefit of the souls of his ancestors, his own soul, and those of his successors. In this charter he directed that the religious should chuse their own abbot; but that this election should be examined and confirmed by the archbishop.

THE archbishop now began to build a new monastery near Dover, which is that whose ruins are here represented, designing it for canons of the order of St. Augustine, but died before he could accomplish it.

HENRY II. succeeding to the throne, confirmed the grant of his predecessor, when, anno 1140, Archbishop Theobald placed in this monastery monks and a prior from Canterbury, giving them all that had been possessed by the canons of St. Martin's, except the provision, or prebends, for two canons, one named Dale, the other Godston; the former of which he kept himself, and the latter was held by the abbot of St. Augustine's: but by what right or authority does not appear. These monks were sent here only during pleasure, and were liable to be recalled or exchanged.

AFTERWARDS the same bishop, without the king's permission, and contrary to the royal charter and the pope's bulls, did by his charter.

charter direct, that the prior of Dover should always be elected out of the monks of Christ Church, Canterbury. This caused great confusion and destruction to the monastery, the affairs of which grew from bad to worse. Archbishop Baldwin, however, gave them a prior out of their own body, named Osbert; by which, during his time, the house was much benefited.

ANNO 1271, in the 13th of King Edward I. the prior of Dover, named Anselm, a monk from Canterbury, had so wasted the goods of this monastery, that the monks had not wherewithal to subsist, or cloath themselves. He had moreover involved the community in debt, to the amount of eleven hundred marks, wherefore they accused him of dilapidation, and ejected him as an unprofitable member.

A DISPUTE arising about the nomination of a new prior, which the archbishop contended should be chosen from among the monks of Canterbury, those of Dover appealed to the king, who determined that they should elect their own prior; and they accordingly elected one Robert Whetacre, who was prior twenty-nine years. The story of the dispute concerning the election of a prior, is thus differently related in the appendix to Batteley's edition of Somner's History of Canterbury.

“As Canterbury Hall, in Oxford, was a nursery of students, so the priory of St. Martin, by Dover, was a cell appertaining to this monastery; let us now take a progress to Dover, and take a short survey of this priory. Anno 1130, the king being present at the dedication of this church, did then, of his royal bounty, give to the monks of this church, his royal chapel at Dover, called St. Martin's. This chapel, in former times, had been a college of secular canons; and anno 1136, Archbishop William having rebuilt it, did attempt to fix here a society of regular canons, whom he brought from Merton for that purpose; but the convent of Christ Church opposed his designs, sending one of their own members, by name Jeremy, to forbid the introducing of these regulars; and, if it was needful, to make an appeal to the court of Rome, on behalf of the convent. This put a stop to the business, the archbishop died in a short time after; and the convent of Christ Church took this opportunity of sending thither twelve monks of their own house, and of constituting a prior over them. In the next year Henry, bishop of Winchester, a man of great power, being the king's brother, and the pope's legate, expelled the new convent, who were as yet hardly settled, and compelled them to return to their old house at Canterbury. Anno 1139, Archbishop Theobald sent again twelve monks from this priory, with Ascelin, sacrist of this church, who was appointed to be their prior. This being done by the archbishop, with the consent of the chapter of his metropolitical church (to whom it was a special act of grace) was never more opposed, but confirmed by papal bulls; and so continued until the general dissolution of priories in this kingdom, a cell to this monastery. Anno 1384, it was taxed as worth 273l. 16s. 8d. It had these churches appropriated to it; Colrede, in the deanry of Sandwich; Higam, Gufston, St. Margaret's, and Backland, in the deanry of Dover; and Appledore, in the deanry of Lymne. The priors of this cell were usually elected out of the obedientiaries of this monastery."
the

FROM Prynne's History of Papal Usurpation, it appears, that Henry III. issued in the 55th and 56th year of his reign, two different writs to the constable of Dover castle, directing him to protect his priory of St. Martin in their rights and privileges, against the monks of Canterbury; and a third, at the instance of the sub-prior and convent, directing the constable of Dover castle, and two monks of St. Martin's, to preserve the goods of that house, which had been notoriously wasted by the prior, and to apply them to the benefit thereof, till the king and council should take farther order therein.

26TH of Henry VIII. here were 13 monks, and the estates of this house were valued, distinct from those of Canterbury, at 170l. 14s. 11d. ob. per ann. Dugdale, 232l. 1s. 5d. ob. Speed. "At the suppression of this priory, the church was taken down (says the author of the Antiquities of Rochester) anno 1546, by Messrs. Buffkin and Netherfole; the bells given to the chamber of Dover. About the same time St. John's church was demolished; for Mr. Netherfole had the lead that covered that church, and one Plane of London, had the land, and two tenements appertaining to it." At present the site and ruins are the property of — Papillion, Esq. in whose family they have been for several generations.—This view, which shews the south aspect, was drawn anno 1760.

(PLATE II.)

THE north-west aspect or inner side of the south gate-house of this priory is here delineated.

Its appearance plainly shews, that solidity and duration were the ideas uppermost in the mind of the architect at the time of its erection. Indeed, from what remains of the other parts of this monastery, one may venture to pronounce it to have been a very plain, or rather inelegant edifice. Perhaps the character these religious bore at the time of its construction, might not render their neighbours over-ready to contribute to the decoration of their monastery, and their own distracted and distressful situation afterwards prevented their doing it.

THE following Catalogue of the priors of this house, is given in Browne Willis's History of Monasteries, from Mr. Warton's Collections, and others.

" ASCELINUS, or Anselmus, prior of Dover, held the abbacy of Hulm in commendam, anno 1139. The year after which he died, and was succeeded by William, who occurs prior, anno 1142; as does

HUGH de CADAMO, anno 1149; and

RICHARD, anno 1157; and

WARIN, anno 1179. His successor, I presume, was

JOHN; who occurs prior, anno 1186; as does

WILLIAM, anno 1187; and

OSBORN, anno 1189; and

ROBERT, anno 1193; and

FELIX,

St. Martin's Priory, Kent.
Pub. at May 1864 by S. Hooper

FÆLIX, anno 1196; and

REGINALD, anno 1212, to whom succeeded, about the year 1229,

WILLIAM DOVER, batchelor of the canon law, and monk of this convent; and to him

ROBERT, elected about the year 1235; whose successor

JOHN, surrendering anno 1251, was succeeded by

GUY; he resigned anno 1260; and had for his successor

WILLIAM de BURWELL; on whose death, which happened at Canterbury, anno 1268,

RICHARD de WENCHEPE, sacrist, was nominated to this dignity, by the archbishop, 28th of October, 1268; four years after which he was deposed on the 7th of the Ides of March, 1272; whereupon the priorship became vacant till the year 1275, when

ANSELM de ESTRIA, sub-prior, was elected by the convent. He was, I presume, succeeded by one

JOHN, on whose death or resignation

ROBERT DE WHITACRE became prior, the 3d of the Kalends of January, 1289: after him

JOHN DE CHOLDON occurs prior, anno 1321; as does

ROBERT, anno 1345, and

RICHARD DE HUGHAM, anno 1350, in which said year

JOHN is likewise entitled prior; as is

THOMAS DENISINS, anno 1353; and

WILLIAM CHERTHAM, anno 1366; and

JAMES STONE, anno 1367; whose successor in this office was

JOHN NEWENHIM: he occurs anno 1371 and 1372; as does

WILLIAM DOVER, anno 1393; whose successor

WALTER CAUSTON dying or resigning anno 1416,

JOHN WOTTON was elected to this dignity. The next I find is

JOHN CUMBE, elected April 14, 1444; to whom succeeded, after about two years government,

JOHN ASHEFORD, and to him

THOMAS DOUR, who was elected anno 1453. After him

HUMPHREY occurs prior, anno 1469; as does

JOHN

JOHN THORNTON, anno 1508, which are all I find, except that JOHN FOLKESTONE, alias Lambert, was last prior, and surrendered this convent with sixteen monks at the dissolution, and had a pension of 20l. per annum allowed him, which he enjoyed anno 1553."

ST. MARTIN'S church had such superiority over the other churches and chapels of Dover, that none of the priests might sing mass till St. Martin's priests had begun,—This view was drawn anno 1760.

THE MONASTERY OF MINSTER, IN THE ISLE OF SHEPEY.

MINSTER, in the isle of Shepey, lyes at the north side of Kent, on an eminence adjoining to the sea, from whence its church is very conspicuous. It is about four miles north-eastward from Queenborough.

THIS monastery, according to Dugdale, was instituted by Sexburga, widow of Ercombert king of Kent, and mother of Egbert, of whom she obtained lands for its foundation. It was completed about the year 675, when it was endowed for seventy-seven nuns. The house suffered much from the Danes, by whom at last it was totally destroyed; but was re-edified anno 1130, by William Corveil, archbishop of Canterbury, who dedicated it to St. Mary and St. Sexburga, and placed therein benedictine nuns. Kilburne says, that about the year 1200, it was appropriated to the abbey of St. Augustine: Their possessions were confirmed to them by Henry IV. The annual revenues of this nunnery were estimated at 129l. 7s. 10d. ob. according to both Dugdale and Speed; but two MS. Valors, quoted by Tanner, make it only 122l. 14s. 6d. ob. About the time of the dissolution, here was a prioress and ten nuns. The site was granted 29th of Henry VIII. together with the manor, to Sir Thomas Cheiney; but his son Henry Lord Cheiney, having in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth, exchanged it with that queen for other lands, she re-granted granted it to Sir Thomas Hobby, who married her kinswoman, Margaret, the daughter of Henry Lord Hunsdon. His son, Sir Edward Hobby, about the middle of the next reign, sold it to Mr. Henry Richards, who bequeathed it to Mr. Gabriel Levesay: he sold it to Sir John Heyward, who vested it in trustees for charitable uses.

Monastery of Minster in the Isle of Sheppey, Kent.
Pub. 3 June 1784 by S. Hooper.

WEAVER supposes the present church to have been part of the monastery, which, with the gate-house, is all that is now remaining. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Sexburga; it consists of two aisles and two chancels, the steeple is at the west end, being a large square tower, with a wooden turret at the top, in which there is a clock and a ring of five bells. It appears to have been higher than it is at present. There was formerly a building adjoining to the east end of the north chancel; the door-case and some ornaments are still remaining. It is estimated only as a curacy, and therefore not valued in the King's Books in the Valor Beneficiorum: But Bishop Williams, in his map of the diocese of Canterbury, rates it at 4l. A fair is kept in the village here, on Monday before Easter-day. In this church are several ancient tombs; particularly one, with this inscription, "Hic jacent Rogerus Norwood & Boon Uxor ejus sepulti ante Conquestum;" and a handsome one of Sir Thomas Cheiney, Knight of the Garter, warden of the cinque ports, constable of Dover Castle, treasurer of the household to Henry VIII. and Edward VI. and privy counsellor to the Queens Mary and Elizabeth. But the most remarkable is that of Sir Robert de Shurland, who resided at Shurland, in this island, temp. Edward I. by whom he was created a knight-banneret, for his gallant behaviour at the siege of Carlaverock, in Scotland (a). A cross-legged figure in armour, with a shield on his left arm, like that of a knight templar, said to represent him, lyes under a Gothic arch in the south wall, having an armed page at his feet; and on his right side, the head of a horse emerging out of the waves of the sea, as in the action of swimming. The monument has suffered much from a custom the country people have been indulged in, of cutting on it the initials of their names, by which the figure of the knight is much defaced. The vane on the tower of the church is also in the figure of the horse's head. These have procured the building the name of the Horse Church. Various are the conjectures concerning the meaning of this horse; but the popular solution is the following Legend, which has, by a worthy friend of mine, been thus hitched into doggerel rhyme. It would be paying the reader but a bad compliment to attempt seriously to examine the credibility of the story.

(a) So says Phillipot; but the name of Shurland does not appear in the ancient poem describing that siege, preserved in the British Museum. Bib. Cotton Caligula, A. xviii. wherein are recorded the names and coats armorial of all the principal nobility and gentry who served on that expedition.

Of monuments that here they show
Within the church, we drew but two:
One an ambassador of Spain's;
T'other Lord Shurland's dust contains;
Of whom a story strange they tell,
And seemingly believe it well.
The lord of Shurland on a day,
Happ'ning to take a ride this way,
About a corpse observ'd a crowd,
Against their priest complaining loud,
That he would not the service say,
Till somebody his fees should pay.
On this his lordship too did rave,
And threw the priest into the grave;
"Make haste and fill it up," (said he)
We'll bury both without a fee."
But when he cooler grew, and thought,
To what a scrape himself he'd brought,
Away he gallop'd to the bay,
Where at that time a frigate lay,
With Queen Elizabeth on board,
When strange to tell! this hair-brain'd lord
On horseback swam to the ship's side;
There told his tale, and pardon cry'd.
The grant with many thanks he takes,
And swimming still, to land he makes;
But on his riding up the beach,
He an old woman meets, (a witch):

"This horse which now your life doth save, (Says she) will bring you to your grave."
"You'll prove a liar," (says my lord)
You ugly hag." Then with his sword,
Acting a most ungrateful part,
The generous beast stabb'd to the heart.
It happened, after many a day,
That with some friends he stroll'd that way;
And this strange story as they walk,
Became the subject of their talk;
When on the bank by the sea-side,
"Yonder the carcase lyes," he cried.
As 'twas not far, he led them to't,
And kick'd the scull up with his foot.
When a sharp bone pierc'd thro' his shoe,
And wounded grievously his toe,
Which mortified: so he was kill'd,
And the hag's prophecy fulfill'd.
See there his cross-legg'd figure laid,
And near his feet the horse's head.
The tomb is of too old a fashion
To tally well with this narration:
But of the tale we would not doubt,
Nor put our Cicerone out.
'Tis a good moral hint at least,
That gratitude's due to a beast.

It is by others supposed to refer to the following circumstance:
Sir Robert Shurland was, it is said, famous for the art of teaching horses

G. Godfrey Sculp.

The Old Church in Dover Castle, Kent.

Pub. 23 Aug. 1781, by S. Hooper.

horses to swim; and having obtained the grant of wreck of the sea, which privilege is always esteemed to reach as far from the shore into the water, as, upon the lowest ebb, a man on horseback can ride in and touch with the point of his lance, he by swimming his horse extended that right beyond the usual limits; which being contested by law, he obtained a decision in his favour, in memory of which the swimming horse was placed on his monument. This story seems scarcely more probable than the former. Had the monument been meant to preserve the memory of the decision here mentioned, he would probably have been represented on horseback with his lance in his hand.—This drawing was made anno 1759.

THE OLD CHURCH IN DOVER CASTLE.

THIS church stands within the castle, on an eminence, surrounded by a circular work. The monkish writers pretend it was built by King Lucius; who, as they report, reigned in Kent and Suffex. Darrel says, the ancient Chronicles of Dover recorded, that it had been first dedicated to Christ, by St. Phaganus, anno 156; but on account of the profanation it afterwards suffered, by the idolatry of the Saxons, was again consecrated by St. Augustine, who dedicated it to the Virgin Mary. He farther adds, that the remains of an altar was to be seen in the tower at the west end of the church; which tower had been adorned with the arms of King Lucius: indeed, it is pretty generally allowed to be of Roman construction; and is supposed to have been a specula, or watch-tower. Of this opinion was Dr. Stukeley, who appears to have accurately considered it; his words are: “The church we are now speaking of was built in the first times of Christianity, out of part of the Roman ruins, whence there are large quantities of Roman bricks laid into the works; the arches are entirely turned with them; the corners and many parts both within and without, are built therewith; and the remainder is of stone, originally cut by the Romans; it is in the form of a cross, and has a square tower in the middle: the stone windows of this church are are of later date than the building; they have been put in long since. The design is simple, but admirably contrived for its use and purpose; the base is octagonal without, within a square; but the sides of the square and octagon are equal: viz. fifteen Roman feet; which reduces the wall to the thickness of ten feet. In this manner it was carried up to the top, which was much higher than at present; but it retires inwards continually from all sides, with much the same proportion as an Egyptian obolus. Upon four of these sides there are windows, narrow, but handsomely turned with a semicircular arch of Roman brick, six foot high: the door to it is on the east side, about six foot wide, very well turned over head with an arch, made of a course of Roman brick and stone alternately, fourteen feet high. All the stones of this work are of a narrow scantling; and the manner of the compofure throughout is perfectly the same with that of Richborough castle: there are first two courses of this brick, which are level with the bottom of these windows; then seven courses of hewn stone, which mount up to the top of the windows; then two courses of brick, seven of stone alternately to the top; every window by this means reaching to a stage or story: there are five of these stages left; they are visible enough to a discerning eye, though some be stopped up, others covered over, others have modern church-like windows of stone put in. I suppose the inside was entirely filled up with a stair-case: the height of what is left, is forty feet: I believe there were twenty feet more, originally; and the whole number of windows on a side was eight. This building was made use of as a steeple, and had a pleasant ring of bells in it, which Sir George Rooke procured to be carried away to Portsmouth: since then, the Office of the Ordnance, under pretext of savingness, have taken the lead that covered it, and left this rare piece of art and masonry to struggle with the sea, air, and weather. Mr. Dagg gave me a coin of Dioclesian found here: the Erpingham's arms are patched up against one side of the pharos, being two bars and a canton; so that I suppose it was repaired in Henry V.'s time, Lord Erpingham being then warden

of

of Dover castle. I have heard there is such another pharos at St. Andrew's, in Scotland.

MANY persons of rank were buried in this church; and here were, according to Darell, monuments for both Sir Robert Ashton, who was constable of the castle, in the year 1384, and his deputy, Richard Malmain, wherein they seem (says he) still to live and breathe in their effigies. Of these, or any other monuments, there are not at present the least vestige; but there is still remaining, against one of the walls, this inscription, relative to the removal of the body of the earl of Northampton, which points out nearly the time when the church began to fall to decay. This was, in all likelihood, after the burial, and before the removal of that earl.

M E M O R A N D U M.

“ IN this place was buried the body of Henry, earl of Northampton, constable of Dover castle, and lord-warden of the cinque ports, A. D. 1614; and in this place stood likewise a monument in memory of the said earl, whose body and monument, by reason of the ruinous condition of this chapel, was removed, A. D. 1696, to the chapel of the hospital of East Greenwich, in the county of Kent, of the foundation of the said earl, at the charge of the worshipful company of Mercers, London, governors of the said hospital; and with the consent of the archbishop of Canterbury, and of his grace the duke of Norfolk, and of Henry, earl of Romney, lord-warden of the cinque ports, and constable of Dover Castle.”

THE view here given (which was drawn anno 1758) represents the south side of the church and pharos; in which the courses of Roman brick are distinctly marked. It likewise shews the burial-ground for the garrison; and at a distance, over the center of the church, the keep or dungeon.

A. D. 1580, on the 6th of April, an earthquake was felt here, which threw down a piece of the cliff next the sea, with part of the castle wall standing on it. This event should have been inserted in the general account of the castle, but was by an oversight omitted.

OSTENHANGER, OR WESTENHANGER HOUSE.
(PLATE I.)

OSTENHANGER stands in the parish of Stamford, towards the south-east part of the county, about two miles and a half north of Hythe.

HARRIS, in his History of Kent, has the following curious description of this place: "Ostenhanger, now generally called Westenhanger, as Phillipot saith it is written in the Pipe Roll of that year, in the 27th of King Henry III. and much after the same manner I find it written in the next reign. This hath been anciently a very eminent seat, and, as some think, was once a parish by itself; and, indeed, it is not unlikely that the chapel of St. John here was once parochial; the ruins of the foundation of which I saw plainly remaining, between the moat and the great barn; and several tomb-stones with crosses on them, were dug up here. The worthy Justinian Champneys, Esq. the present owner of this manor, tells me, that by his writings he judges this chapel to have been formerly a parish; and there is now a place called the Parsonage Field. None also of the eminent owners of this great house have been buried in Stamford Church; and several of them having been buried here, is also another argument for the same opinion. John son of Nicholas de Croill, in the 19th year of King Edward III. obtained a licence to found a chauntry here, which he endowed with one messuage, forty-five acres of arable, and six acres of pasture land, lying in Limpne.

"THIS famous seat, Phillipot saith, did anciently belong to the family of Auberville: Sir William de Auberville lived here in King Richard the First's reign, at the time when he founded the abbey of West Langdon. His son, Hugh de Auberville, was also a good benefactor to that convent; and his son was Sir William de Pub. by J. W. & J. H. Hooper.

Oftenhanger House, Kent. Pl. 1.

de Auberville, whose only daughter carried it in marriage to Nicholas de Crioll, probably a great-grandson of Bertram de Crioll, who was sheriff of Kent in the 27th year of King Henry III. There was also another Bertram de Crioll, who died possessed of a good part of this estate, in the 23d year of King Edward I. and left it to Joan his daughter, who carried it to her husband Sir Richard de Rokesley; and who, on her brother John de Crioll's decease, became his sole heir. This Sir Richard de Rokesley, who was knighted by King Edward I. at the famous siege of Carlaverock in Scotland, left only two daughters; Joan, who was the wife of Walter de Pateshall, and Agnes, who carried this estate in marriage to Thomas de Poynings. He had issue Nicholas Poynings, who was summoned to sit in parliament as a baron in the 33d year of King Edward III. Michael Poynings had the same honour in the 42d year of that king: and one Lucas de Poynings sat the same year in the same rank. On the division of the estate, Westenhanger fell to Michael's share, whose son Thomas sat also in parliament as a baron in the 6th year of King Henry IV. as also did his grandson Robert de Poynings, who died in the 8th year of King Edward IV. and left Sir Edward Poynings his son and heir. This gentleman lived here, was a privy counsellor to King Henry VII. knight of the garter, and lord lieutenant of Ireland; and it was by his influence on that nation, that the famous statute passed, called Poynings' Law. He was likewise at the siege of Terwin with King Henry VIII. and was made knight-banneret for his good services there; but he dying in the 12th year of that king's reign, without any lawful issue, his estate escheated to the Crown: however King Henry VIII. gave this, and some other parts of it, to his natural son, Thomas Poynings, afterwards made knight of the Bath at Queen Anne Boleyn's coronation; and in the 36th year of King Henry VIII. he sat in parliament as Baron Poynings of Westenhanger. About a year after this, he died without issue; and then this manor returned to the Crown again, where it lay till King Edward VI. granted it to John Dudley, earl of Warwick, and afterwards Duke of Northum-thumberland; but on his attainder in the first of Queen Mary, it came again to the Crown, and was by Queen Elizabeth granted to her kinsman, Sir Thomas Sackville, who not long after sold it to Thomas Smith, Esq. usually called Customer Smith, who very much improved and augmented the building of the house, which had been greatly damaged by fire. From him it descended to his great-grandson Philip Smith, viscount Strangeford, who resided here in Phillipot's time; but at length he sold it to Finch, from whence it went in the same way into the possession of Justinian Champneys, Esq. who hath built here a neat small house out of the remains of the old one; and very august and noble those ruins are, and shew this seat to have been once a very large and magnificent pile of building, and which some fancy to have been erected by Oefce, son and successor to Hengist king of Kent, and from him to have had the name of Oefcinhanger: But though this be not very improbable, (for I know not where else to fix the place of Hengist's residence in this county), yet we have nothing in history to confirm it; and the buildings here have by no means the face of so great antiquity, and I believe did not precede the time of the Criolls or Aubervilles, unless you would think that by the tower here called Rosamond's, (and where the tradition is, that fair mistress was kept for some time), it did belong once to Henry II. and perhaps might be given by him to the Aubervilles; which conjecture will receive some confirmation from what I observed here, as I was looking carefully over the venerable ruins of this place, where I met with several pieces of excellent carved work in stone; for I found the left hand of a statue well carved in stone, with the end of a sceptre grasped in it. This I fancied then to have been part of the figure of King Henry II. because I remembered, that in Sandford's Genealogical History of our Kings, there was a seal of that prince with his sceptre in his left hand, and the ball or mound in his right; a position so unusual, that one would almost conclude from it, that King Henry II. was left-handed. This house was once moted all round, and had had a draw-bridge, a gate-house and portal, whose arch was large and strong, with a portcuse or portcullis, and the walls all embattled and fortified with nine towers; one of which, with the gallery or garret adjoining to it, was called, as is abovementioned, Fair Rosamond's Tower; and it was thought she was kept here for some time before she was removed to Woodstock. The room they call her prison, was the long garret, of one hundred and sixty feet in length, which they call her gallery. Within the great gate was a court of one hundred and thirty feet square, in the middle of which was once a fountain. Over the door by which you entered the house was a stone figure of St. George on horseback, and under that, were four coats of arms; the royal one, another, a key and crown, held by two angels; and the other two defaced. On the right hand was a pair of free-stone stairs eight feet wide, and of twenty steps; this led into a chapel of thirty-three feet long and seventeen feet wide: this was not the church or chapel of St. John, but one of a much later date, being erected there by Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the Garter, and comptroller of the king's household, in the 12th year of King Henry VIII. This appears by a French inscription on two stones, which now lye in Mr. Smith's parlour, in this parish; and which, among other things, were brought out of the ruins of Westenhanger. At each corner of the window of this chapel, was carved curiously well in stone, a canopy. There were also pedestals for statues; and over the window stood a stone statue of St. Anthony, with his pig at his feet, which had a bell hung in one of its ears. At the west end of the chapel were statues of St. Christopher, and King Herod. The hall was fifty feet long and thirty-two wide, and a music gallery in it at one end, and cloisters which led from the other end to the chapel, parlour, &c. There were then in the house one hundred and twenty-six rooms, and a report was, that there were three hundred and sixty-five windows. In the year 1701, for the lucre of 1000l. which was given for the materials then standing in this house, three quarters of it were pulled down : and the account above is the condition it was in when that was begun.

“ PHILLIPOT mentions another part of this estate of Westenhanger, which coming to Nicholas de Crioll by the heir of Auberville, afterwards went thus : John, son of this gentleman, (who, by the bye, in the 19th year of King Edward III. had a licence to build and embattle at Westenhanger, and to found the chauntry above-mentioned, in St. John's chapel) left it to his son Sir Nicholas de Crioll, who died seized of it in the 3d year of King Richard III. from him it descended to Sir Thomas Crioll or Keriell, as they began now to be called ; and he was killed in the second battle of St. Albans, in the 30th year of King Henry VI. He left no son, but by one of his daughters and co-heirs it went in marriage to Thomas Fogg, Esq. who, about the end of King Edward IV. sold it to his elder brother, Sir John Fogg, of Repton ; and he, about the beginning of King Henry VIII. parted with it the same way to Sir Edward Poynings, above-mentioned.”—This view, wherein is shewn Rosamond's Tower, was drawn anno 1773.

(PLATE II.)

THIS view shews the great entrance on the north-west side, as viewed from the inner court. It seems to have been very noble, and was vaulted over by arches springing from six polygonal pilasters, at present only about six feet high ; but as the ground hereabouts has been much raised, undoubtedly great part of the height of this entrance has been buried.

LITTLE can be added to the account of this house quoted from Harris, in the former plate, except that it was in the hands of King Henry VIII. when Leland wrote his Itinerary. His words are : “ Costinhaungre was Creal's lordship, of sum now corruptley caullid Westenanger. Poyninges a late held it ; the king hath it now.” That king, in the 32d year of his reign, granted to Sir Thomas Cheyney, Knt. treasurer of his household, and warden of the cinque ports, the office of constable of the castle of Saltwood, Morris sculp.

Ostenhanger House, Kent. Pl. 2.

Pub. 25 August 1784. by J. Hooper.

Chapel of St Pancrace, in St Aug. Mon. Canterbury.
Pubd. May 1784 by S. Hooper

S. Hooper sc.

Saltwood, and keeper of this capital messuage or mansion, at Westenhanger, and of the orchards and gardens to the same belonging, and keeper of his parks there, and of those of Westenhanger. Wages as constable of Saltwood, 9l. 2s. 6d. keeper of Westenhanger house, 6d. per diem; and keeper of the parks, 4d. per diem.

STRYPE, in his Annals, vol. II. page 314, mentions, "Queen Elizabeth at her own house at Westenhanger." By Harris's account, it was some time in the Crown during her reign; but is not mentioned amongst her houses, in the list of them published in Peck's Desiderata Curiosa. It at present belongs to ——— Champneys, Esq. a descendant of Justinian Champneys, and is let for a farm-house.

HERE in the last civil war, divers prisoners were a while confined by the parliamentary general, after the defeat of those of the king's party at Maidstone, June 1, 1648; and among them Sir William Brockman, who was very active in the royal cause. This anecdote, though not mentioned in the histories of those times, was communicated by a gentleman of that family.—This view was drawn anno 1773.

THE CHAPEL OF ST. PANCRAS IN ST. AUGUSTINE'S MONASTERY, CANTERBURY.

THE ruins of this little oratory stand near the south-easternmost part of the Abbey-close. It is commonly supposed to be of great antiquity; but this opinion is controverted by Somner, who gives very good reasons for his doubts.

"THE next thing, says he, is the chapel of St. Pancras, built (as the private chroniclers make report) before Augustine came, and used by the king, before his conversion to Christianity, for the place of his idol-worship; but after it, the first that Augustine, after he had purged it from the worship of the false, consecrated to the service of the true God, and dedicated to St. Pancrace; wherewith the Devil, all enraged, and not brooking his ejection

ejection from the place he had so long enjoyed, the first time that Augustine celebrates mass there, furiously assaults the chappel to overturn it; but having more of will than power to actuate his intended mischief, all he could do was to leave the ensigns of his malice, the print of his talons [such as I have elsewhere seen by ivy growing and eating into old walls, even of stone] on the south porch of the wall of the chapel, where they are visible to this day. Thus Thorn tells the tale; and no better than a tale can I conceive it to be. I will grant that a chapel of that name, of no small antiquity, there was sometime standing, where a good part of her ruins are yet left, built almost wholly of British or Roman brick (infallible remains of antiquity): that on the walls, outside of the south porch, such tokens as the historian will have it to be the marks of the beast, are visible enough: that of latter time this story became vulgarly received. Hamond Beale, to instance in one for many, anno 1492, gives by his will to the reparation of St. Pancrace his chapel within the precinct of St. Augustine's church-yard, and of the chapel where St. Augustine first celebrated mass in England, annexed to the former 3l. 6s. 8d. But that either this was the place where St. Augustine first said mass in England (St. Martin's was it, as Bede will tell you) or that the story is further true than I have granted, I cannot believe.

“To give you my reasons, consult Venerable Bede's Preface to his Ecclesiastical History; and you shall find he there acknowledgeth his intelligence for these parts received chiefly from Albinus, the then abbot of St. Augustine's; who with diligence instructed him in all things that, either by written record or tradition of his elders, had come unto his knowledge any ways memorable. But take his own words. He says, “The most reverend abbot Albinus, a man skilled in all kind of learning, became above all others, my chief helper in this work; who being instituted in the church of Canterbury by the venerable and most learned men, Archbishop Theodore of blessed memory, and Hadrian the abbot, had diligently come to the knowledge ledge of all things which were done by the disciples of the blessed Pope Gregory, both in the province of Canterbury itself, and in the bordering countries also, either from the monuments of learning, or from the report of the aged, and transmitted to me, concerning these matters, whatsoever seemed worth to be recorded, by Nothelmus, a religious priest of the church of London, either by writing, or by word of mouth." Thus Bede; add hereunto, That this was a matter so remarkable, an occurrence so much in itself, but in respect of the circumstances of time and place, much more memorable: of time; it happening so in the very infancy of the English Saxon church: of place; being such as an idol-temple was become, and that newly, a Christian oratory: that than it, there is not a thing more worthy to be kept in memory, in the whole story of times; and therefore could not have escaped the one, the intelligencer (Elbinc's) knowledge; nor consequently the other, the historian (Bede's) pen. But for all this, look and you shall find, that Bede is so far from making mention of it, that he remembers not so much as the chapel. This is much; but let me add yet further: The following chronologers, for the most part monks, all pass it over in deep silence. Could Fame have been (think you) so sluggish, or so confined, that so famous a matter as this should fall from no author's pen, till (in comparison) but yesterday, till Spot's and Thorn's days? The case so standing, let him believe it that can give credit to it for me; and so I leave it."

If these reasons are not deemed sufficient, to them may be added, that the shape of the east window of the present chapel is pointed; a circumstance alone sufficient to invalidate its pretensions to very remote antiquity.

MR. BATTELEY, in his additions to Somner, says, from Thorn and other authorities, That this chapel was built by King Ead-bald in honour of the Blessed Virgin; and that St. Dunstan was wont, a midnight, to visit this church and chapel, and to spend much time at his devotions therein; but that this enlargement of the fabric of the church of this monastery did, in process of time, quite swallow up this chapel.

THIS view, which represents the south aspect, was drawn anno 1775. The traces of the devil's claws appear on the east side of the small square building, formerly the porch of the chapel.

QUEENBOROUGH CASTLE, IN THE ISLE OF SHEPEY.

THIS view was taken from an undoubted original drawing, made by Hollar, in the collection of the late Mr. Grose, of Richmond, in Surry. It is supposed to be that from which Hollar engraved the small view of this castle, a print extremely rare: on a comparison, it was found perfectly to agree with the traces and foundations of this edifice, now levelled with the ground. Of which Mr. Haisted, in his History of Kent, gives the following account:

THE parish of Queenborough, which lyes thenext adjoining south westward from that of Minster, on the western shore of this island, was so called in honour of Philippa, queen to King Edward III.

THERE was an ancient castle here, called the castle of Shepey, situate at the western mouth of the Swale, formerly, as has been already mentioned, accounted likewise the mouth of the river Thames, which was built for the defence both of the island and the passage on the water; the usual one then being between the main land of the county and this island.

THIS castle was begun to be new built by King Edward III. about the year 1361, being the 36th of his reign, and was finished about six years afterwards; being raised, as he himself says in his letters patent, dated May 10, in his 42d year, for the strength of the realm, and for the refuge of the inhabitants of this island.

THIS was undertaken under the inspection of William of Wickham, the king's chief architect, afterwards Bishop of Winchester; who, considering the difficulties arising from the nature of the ground and the lowness of the situation, acquitted himself in Kewen, sculp.

Pub. by Wm. & A. S. Hooper.

Queenborough Castle, Kent.

in this task with his usual skill and abilities, and erected here, a large, strong and magnificent building, fit equally for the defence of the island and the reception of his royal master. When it was finished, the king paid a visit to it, and remained here some days; during which time he made this place a free borough in honour of Philippa his queen, naming it from thence Queenborough, and by charter bearing date anno 1366, he created it a corporation, making the townsmen burgeses, and giving them power to chuse yearly a mayor and two bailiffs, who should make their oath of allegiance before the constable of the castle, and be justices within the liberties of the corporation, exclusive of all others, and endowing them with cognizance of pleas, with the liberty of two markets weekly, on Mondays and Thursdays, and two fairs yearly; one on the eve of our lady, and the other on the feast of St. James; and benefiting them with freedom of tholle, and sundry other bountiful privileges, which might allure men to inhabit this place. Three years after which, as a further favour of it, he appointed a staple of wool at it.

KING HENRY VIII. repaired this castle in the year 1536, at the time he rebuilt several others in these parts, for the defence of the sea coasts; but even then it was become little more than a mansion for the residence of the constable of it, in which situation it continued till the death of King Charles I. in 1648; soon after which, the powers then in being seized on this castle, among the rest of the possessions of the Crown; and on the 16th of July following, passed an ordinance to vest the same in trustees, that they might be forthwith surveyed and sold, to supply the necessities of the state: accordingly this castle was surveyed in 1650, when it was returned, "That it consisted of a capital messuage, called Queenborough Castle, lying within the common, belonging to the town of Queenborough, called Queenborough Marsh, in the parish of Minster, and containing about twelve rooms of one range of buildings below stairs, and of about forty rooms from the first story upwards, being circular and built of stone, with six towers and certain out-offices thereto belonging; all the roof being

being covered with lead. Within the circumference of the castle was one little round court, paved with stone; and in the middle of that, one great well; and without the castle was one great court surrounding it; both court and castle being surrounded with a great stone wall, and the outside of that moated round: the said castle abutting to the highway leading from the town of Queenborough to Eastchurch, south, and it contained three acres, one rood, and eleven perches of land. That the whole was much out of repair, and no ways defensive by the common-wealth, or the island on which it stood, being built in the time of bows and arrows. That as no platform for the planting of cannon could be erected on it, and it having no command of the sea, although near unto it, they adjudged it not fit to be kept, but demolished; and that the materials were worth, besides the charge of taking down, 1,792l. 12s. 0½d."

THE above survey sufficiently points out the size and grandeur of this building, which was soon after sold, with all its appurtenances, to Mr. John Wilkinson, who pulled the whole of it down, and removed the materials.

THE site of the castle remained in his possession afterwards till the restoration of King Charles II. anno 1660, when the inheritance of it returned again to the Crown, where it has continued ever since.

THERE are not any of the remains of the castle or walls to be seen at this time, only the moat continues still as such, and the ancient well in the middle of the site, which long remained choaked up; but was, after several attempts made to restore it, anno 1723, opened by order of the commissioners of the Navy. A full account of which was communicated to the Royal Society by Mr. Peter Collison, and is entered in their Transactions.

THE constables of this castle were men of considerable rank, as appears by the following list of them:

ANNO 36 Edw. III. John Foxley was the first constable.

ANNO 50 Edw. III. John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster.

ANNO

ANNO 8 Rich. II. Robert de Vere, Marquis of Dublin and earl of Oxford, attainted anno 11 Rich. II.

ANNO 16 Rich. II. Sir Arnold Savage, Knt. obt. 12 Henry IV.

ANNO 20 Rich. II. William le Scroope, son of the Lord Scroope.

ANNO 1 Hen. IV. William de Watterton.

ANNO 4 Hen. IV. John Cornwall, baron of Fanhope.

ANNO 10 Hen. IV. Thomas Arundel, archbishop of Canterbury.

ANNO 1 Hen. V. Gilbert de Umfreville, obt. anno 9 Hen. V.

ANNO 28 Hen. VI. Humphrey Stafford, duke of Buckingham, obt. 27 July, anno 38 Hen. VI.

ANNO 1 { Edw. IV. John Norwood, Esq.
George, duke of Clarence, obt. 17 Edw. IV.

ANNO 1 Rich. III. Thomas Wentworth.

2 Ditto, Christopher Collyns.

ANNO 1 { Hen. VII. William Cheney.
Sir Anthony Browne, knt. of the garter,
obt. 22 Hen. VII.

ANNO 2 Hen. VIII. Francis Cheney.

ANNO 3 Hen. VIII. Sir Thomas Cheney, knt. of the garter, &c. obt. anno 1 Elizabeth.

ANNO 1 { Eliz. Sir Richard Constable, Knt.
Sir Edward Hoby, Knt.

TEMP. Jac. 1. Philip, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, the last constable of this castle.

IN the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the annual fee of the keeper of this castle was 29l. 2s. 6d.

FROM a book containing the grants of the 1st and 2d of Richard III. preserved among the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, and marked No. 433, there is an entry of a warrant for timber to be delivered to Christopher Colyns, for certain reparations at the castle of Quenesburghe; and, in another place in the same book, is a commission empowering him to take masons, stones, &c. necessary for the works in the said castle, whence it is evident that castle was then repaired.

GUNDULPH'S TOWER, ROCHESTER.

THIS tower, which stands on the north side of the cathedral church of Rochester, is generally supposed to have been built by the bishop whose name it bears, as a place of security for the treasure and archives of that church and see. Some suppose it to have been intended for a bell tower, and others for an ecclesiastical prison; but whatever might be its destination, its machicolations, its loop-hole windows, and the thickness of its walls shew that strength and defence were considered as necessary.

THIS tower was originally in height about sixty feet, four or five of which have either fallen, or been taken down; its walls are six feet thick, and contain within them an area of about twenty feet square; it was divided into five floors or stories of unequal height, and had a communication with the upper part of the church by means of an arch or bridge, the steps of which are still visible. The common report is, that this was the only entrance into it; but on examination there were two other doors, one on the north side, at the base of the tower, and another on the third story. From divers circumstances in the church, there are some grounds to suppose this tower was erected after that edifice was completed.—This view was drawn anno 1781.

ROCHESTER CASTLE. (PLATE I.)

THIS venerable and majestic ruin stands upon an eminence, on the eastern bank of the river Medway, a small distance south of and above the bridge; on or near which spot, it is said, stood a castle built by the Romans. Kilburne, in his Survey of Kent, has the following account of its origin: "J. Cæsar commanded it to be built (according to the Roman order) to awe the Britons, and the same was called the castle of Medway; but time and tempests bringing the same entirely to decay, Oesc, or Uſke, king of Kent, about the year 490, caused Hroff, one of his chief counsellors, Gundulph's Tower.

Published, May, 1793. By S. Hooper.

Pub. by Chapman & Co. by J. Hooper.

Rochester Castle, Kent. Pl.

fellors, and lord of this place, to build a new castle upon the old foundation, and hereupon it took the name of Hroffe's castle." As to the first part of this piece of history, which assigns the building of the castle to J. Cæsar, probabilities are extremely strong against it, both on account of the short stay he made in this island; and the difficulties and perplexities in which, during that time, he was involved; but that the Britons might erect a fortress here after his secession seems very likely, as by its situation it commanded the passage over the Medway; the importance of which must, at that time, have been well known; the same reasons make it probable that it was repaired, and perhaps improved, by the Roman legions, who, in the time of Claudius arrived here under the command of A. Plautius. That this was a Roman station seems indubitable, not only from the number of Roman bricks, coins, lachrymatories, and other vessels, found in and near the castle; the course of the Roman way which led cross the river near this place, but likewise from the testimony of Antoninus in his Itinerary. It is also possible, that this castle, falling to ruin, might have been rebuilt by Ufke, king of Kent, as is above related by Kilburne; since in the year 765, a castle is mentioned here, in the grant of certain lands given by King Egbert to the church of Rochester, which are described as lying within the walls of the castle of Rochester; and in 855, Ethelwulf, king of the West-Saxons, gave a house and lands to one Dunne, (his minister) the situation of which is said to be "meridie castelli Hrobi," supposed to signify to the south of the castle of Rochester. To these it has been indeed objected, that the whole city is by King Offa called a castle; for in his grant to Bishop Waremund, he styles him "Episcopum castelli quod nominatur Hroffecæster;" and again, that the extent of land mentioned by King Egbert, viz. "Unum viculum cum duobus jugeribus et intra mœnia castelli," must signify the whole city, and not any fort or castle in the city; likewise, that in the account of sieges before the Conquest, no mention is made of the castle, though, in like cases, after that event, it is always particularly spoken of.

THE

THE answers to these objections are, that the title of Bishop of Rochester castle, given to Waremund, might perhaps be done as a declaratory acknowledgment of his authority over it, from which, as a royal fortress, it might claim exemption; or else it might have been given to some former bishop as a place of security, to which he could retire in case of an invasion; but being afterwards with-held from the see, this was perhaps a formal and solemn acknowledgment of the episcopal right. With respect to the argument drawn from the extent and situation of the land mentioned in King Egbert's charter, the former, namely, one little street, and two acres, is nearly the quantity of land inclosed within the present walls, and perhaps the former fortifications might have been more extensive; and in all the ancient writings and charters relating to the church of Rochester in Reg. Roff. the wall of the city is distinguished from those of the castle; the former is expressed by the word Murus, and the latter generally by Mœnia. Now the land in question is said to be intra Mœnia; and besides, in the grant of Ethelwulf before-mentioned, the house and lands are said to be southward of the castle; and there is also mention of two acres of meadow land, and a right of common in the marshes, probably those by the river side; all which agrees with the situation of the present castle. Although these reasons do not seem quite conclusive, yet the general determination is for the ancient existence of the castle; and of this opinion is the ingenious author of the History of Rochester, lately published, who says, On summing up these particulars, I must conclude, there was a fortification called a castle "within the city on this spot, before the Conquest, although much less strong and respectable than the present castle has been." Bede mentions this castle, which he styles castellum Cantuariorum; and in the year 884, it sustained a sharp siege by Hasting, the Dane, who, according to their method of attack, cast upon the south side of it, that high mount now called Bully-hill. In this siege the castle suffered considerably, and afterwards lay a long time desolate and neglected, till, as Kilburne says, (though he gives no authority for his assertion) it was rebuilt by William the conqueror, who garrisoned it with five hundred soldiers. The present remains of this castle, indeed, confirm this position, being evidently of Norman construction; the form of the great tower, or keep, commonly called Gundulph's Tower, being extremely similar to that of Dover, as well as to the White Tower in London; and indeed to the keeps of many other castles built about the time of the Conquest. It is probable this was chiefly the work of Odo, bishop of Bayeux, in Normandy, bastard brother to the conqueror, chief justiciary of England, and earl of Kent, who is said to have resided in this city. The known turbulence of his temper makes it likely he should desire to have a place of strength in his custody.

no

ABOUT this time it appears, an exchange of lands passed between the king and bishop of Rochester, wherein the latter had lands given him at Aylsford, in lieu of a piece of ground in Rochester, for the king to build a castle on. "I am inclined to think, says the author of the History of Rochester, that this piece of ground was two acres within the castle before-mentioned, given to the church of Rochester by Egbert, king of Kent; and now again put into the king's hands, that he might rebuild and strengthen the fortifications. This exchange gave rise to the prevailing notion, that Rochester Castle stood in Aylsford parish."

THIS castle was, in the beginning of the reign of William Rufus, in the custody of the before named Bishop Odo; having been restored to him by that king among his other honours and estates, which he had forfeited by his behaviour in the former reign, and for which he had been confined in the castle of Rouen, in Normandy: but no ties either of blood or gratitude could bind this rebellious priest; for shortly after, viz. in the second year, he appeared in arms for Robert duke of Normandy, elder brother to Rufus, drew over to his party many of the nobility of England, and fortified against his king and benefactor the very castle with which he had intrusted him. Rufus immediately set about raising an army to chastise him; but finding recruits to come in but slowly, he issued out a proclamation signifying, "That whosoever would not be reputed a Niding, should repair to the siege of Rochester." What was the meaning of this term, has not reached these days: undoubtedly it was a word of high reproach; since to avoid that appellation, soldiers flocked to his standard from every quarter, with whose assistance he soon reduced the town, and closely, though without much effect, besieged the castle, which was defended six weeks, and probably would have held out much longer, but for a contagious distemper which broke out amongst the garrison, whereupon they offered to capitulate. At first the king, justly exasperated with the ingratitude of their leader, would listen to no terms; but at length, by the mediation of his nobles, he permitted them to march out with their horses and arms, and to depart the kingdom without forfeiting their estates. Odo was for a while confined in Tunbridge Castle, but on condition of his quitting the kingdom, was afterwards set at liberty.

IN this siege the castle received considerable damage, which the king obliged Bishop Gundulph, who was then famous for his skill in architecture, to repair; refusing to confirm a grant for the manor of Hadenham, in Buckinghamshire, given to the see of Rochester by Archbishop Lanfranc, unless Gundulph would expend 60*l.* in repairing the injuries sustained by this siege, and in other necessary additions: this perhaps was meant as a fine for the part the bishop might have taken in the late insurrection; as it appears even this condition was obtained by the friendly interposition of Robert Fitz Haman, and Henry earl of Warwick. Gundulph, therefore, in obedience to this agreement, greatly repaired the walls, and began the building of the keep, or great square tower, which still bears his name. It is disputed whether he lived to finish it. Indeed the arguments, though on neither side very convincing, seem rather stronger for his not completing it, than those brought to support the contrary opinion.

THE author of the History of Rochester uses the following reasons to prove it was not finished by Gundulph: I cannot, however (says he) think that Gundulph finished this stupendous work, but but am rather of opinion, that it was the labour of many years; for, in the year 1126, King Henry I. by advice of his council, granted to William Corbyl, then archbishop of Canterbury, and to his successors, the custody of this castle, and the office of castellan annexed to it, with free liberty to build a tower in it for himself; that is, says Phillipot, another tower correspondent to Gundulph's: but I imagine this to be the same tower, it being too large a work to be compleated so soon as these accounts seem to intimate. The affair of Odo was in the year 1089; Gundulph might have finished the repairs of the castle, and have made some progress in building his tower about the year 1092, by which time it is probable he had expended the greatest part of the stipulated sum, and could not proceed in his intended project of the tower, without a grant of money from the Crown; but it does not appear that any such aid was given him. It deserves also to be remarked, that Henry II. in a charter without date, says, "I will that the monks of Rochester, and their men, be freed from all the work of the castle, et expeditione Archi sue constructione;" by which it is evident, that the tower was then building. The first year of Henry II. was twenty-eight years after the grant made to the Archbishop, with liberty to build a tower, that being in 1126." Vide Regist. Ross. p. 41. Besides these, he likewise urges, that as this was a military building, and a kind of fine set upon the bishop, it was not likely he would be over-hearty in the work; neither was the sum prescribed him to expend, by any ways sufficient for such an edifice: moreover, he had then on his hands a very expensive undertaking, being no less than the rebuilding of his church and monastery, which alone would call for all his pecuniary abilities, particularly as his income was not great, and even for part of it he was then engaged at law. On the other hand, the first of these arguments, however, seems to prove but little: Permission might be given to Archbishop Corbyl to erect another tower similar to that built by Gundulph, and yet might have never been put in execution by him. Neither is the reason which has induced this author to consider it as the same tower, at all apparent; rent; but the chief argument brought in favour of its having been finished in Gundulph's lifetime, is deduced from the similarity of some of the ornaments on the castle to those of the cathedral. To which it may be answered, that even supposing the bishop did not live to complete it, it might be finished from his original plan, which is the more likely, considering his reputation for skill in architecture; and this will sufficiently account for a sameness in the ornaments and style of building.

IN the reign of King Henry I. this castle, as has already been observed, was put into the custody of the archbishops of Canterbury by that king: but they did not long hold it; for in the succeeding reign, about the year 1163, Thomas Becket, among other complaints he made against Henry II. accused him of having unjustly deprived him of the castle of Rochester, heretofore annexed to the see of Canterbury.

IN the disputes between King John and his barons, anno 1215, on the subject of Magna Charta, this castle was seized by the latter, and committed to the custody of William de Albinet. The King immediately invested it, and carried on a regular siege, breaking down all the bridges, and fortifying the avenues leading to it; so that when Robert Fitz Walter was sent by the barons to its relief, he could not give them any assistance. Nevertheless, it was defended with great vigour for three months, during which time the garrison was reduced to the necessity of eating their horses; at length their walls being ruined by the battering engines of the besiegers, and they seeing no prospect of relief, were obliged to surrender at discretion. King John, fired with resentment at their obstinate resistance, at first resolved to gratify his revenge by putting the garrison to the sword; but being convinced of the imprudence of such a step by some of his courtiers, he confined de Albinet and some others of the principal prisoners in different castles; but caused all the soldiers, except the cross-bow men, to be hanged, as a terrible example to others. The castle was the next year besieged, and easily taken by Lewis, dauphin of France; the damage sustained in the former siege not having been repaired.

(PLATE

Pub. 28. Aug. 1794. by J. H. Hooper.

Rochester Castle, Kent. Pl. 2.

(PLATE II.)

HENRY III. succeeding to the Crown, anno 1228, gave the custody of this castle to Hubert de Burg, justiciary of England. It was afterwards, during the war between that king and his barons, garrisoned and put into the possession of Edward earl Warren for the king, and anno 1246 unsuccessfully besieged by the Earl of Leicester. This castle was given by Henry, to Guy de Rochford, one of his foreign favourites, but he being banished, it reverted to the Crown; and in the 48th year of his reign, he entrusted it to the care of William St. Clare, whose ancient seat was at Woodlands, in the parish of Kingsdown, in this county. He died the same year in his office of castellan.

IN the 2d year of Edward I. anno 1274, Robert de Hougham, lord of Hougham, near Dover, died constable of this castle, and was succeeded the next year by Robert de Septuans, from whom the Harfleets of East Kent are descended.

IN 1304 Stephanus de Dene was constable; he was displaced for some illegal taxes levied by him on the lands belonging to the monks of the adjoining monastery.

IN the 15th of Edward II. anno 1322, the castle was in the custody of Henry de Cobham, as appears by a writ of privy-seal mentioned in Madox's History of the Exchequer, whereby he, or in his absence, his lieutenant was directed so to provide and keep it, that it should not be in danger either from a deficiency of munition, or want of sufficient guarding.

IN 1328 one William Skarlett was constable of this castle, who made a distrain on one Simon Sharstede, for castle-guard rents due for lands in Wateringbury; and the same year, in the rebellion headed by Wat Tyler and Jack Straw, a party of rebels besieged this place, entered it, and took a prisoner out of it by force.

IN 1413 William Kerial, or Croill, died governor of it; after him it was given to Thomas lord Cobham, who held it till his death in 1472.

EDWARD VI. who began his reign anno 1461, repaired the walls both of the city and castle, which seems to have been the last work bestowed on them: from that time the castle was suffered to moulder away by degrees, so that in the next century, it became of very little importance; it rested among the manors of the Crown, till the time of James I. and in 1610, was by that king granted, with all its services annexed, to Sir Anthony Welldone, of Swanscombe; one of whose descendants, Walker Welldone, Esq. sold the timbers of it to one Gimmit, and the stone stairs, and other squared and wrought stone of the windows and arches, to different masons in London; he would likewise have sold the whole materials of the castle to a paviour; but, on an essay made on the east side, near the postern leading to Bully-Hill, the effects of which are seen in a large chasm, the mortar was found so hard, that the expence of separating the stones amounted to more than their value, by which this noble pile escaped a total demolition. This Walker Welldone dying a bachelor, his estate came to Miss Welldone, his sister, who married Mr. Harrison, a goldsmith, in London. They conveyed the manor of Swanscombe and castle of Rochester, to Thomas Blechynden, Esq.; from him it came to the late Mr. Child, the banker, whose son, Robert Child, Esq. is the present proprietor.

MUCH land in this and other counties is held of this castle, whose tenure is perfect castle-guard. On St. Andrew's day, old style, a banner is hung out at the house of the receiver of the rents; and formerly every tenant, who did not then discharge his proper rent, was liable to have it doubled, on the return of every tide in the adjacent river, during the time it remained unpaid.

THE present state of this castle is thus minutely described in the History and Antiquities of Rochester. "This castle is placed on a small eminence near the river Medway, just above Rochester Bridge, and consequently is in the south-west angle of the walls of the city. It is nearly of a quadrangular form, having its sides parallel with the walls of the city. It is about three hundred feet square

square within the walls, which were seven feet in thickness, and twenty feet high, above the present ground, with embrasures. Three sides of the castle were surrounded with a deep broad ditch, which is now nearly filled up: on the other side runs the Medway. In the angles and sides of the castle were one round and several square towers, some of which are still remaining, which were raised above the walls, and contained lower and upper apartments, with embrasures on the top. The walls of the castle are built with rough stones, of very irregular forms, cemented by a composition in which are large quantities of shells, and is now extremely hard. The entrance into this fortress is from the south east; part of the portal still remains; on each side of this entrance is an angular recess, with arches in the outer walls, that command the avenues to the bridge of the castle to the right and left; over the gateway and the recesses was a large tower. From this entrance is an easy descent into the city, formed on two arches over the castle ditch.

THE descent from the castle terminated in a street, which, in Reg. Roff. is called a Venellam, and was the grand avenue from the high street to the castle, which doubtless procured it the name of Castle Street; which it appears by a court roll, to have retained so low at least as 1576. But what chiefly attracts the notice of a spectator is, the noble tower which stands on the south-east angle of this castle, and is so lofty as to be seen distinctly at twenty miles distant. It is quadrangular in its form, having its sides parallel with the walls of the castle, and its angles nearly correspond with the four cardinal points of the compass. It is about seventy feet square at the base; the outside of the walls are built inclining inward somewhat from a perpendicular, and are in general twelve feet thick. Adjoining to the east angle of this tower, is a small one, about two-thirds the height of the large tower, and about twenty-eight feet square. The grand entrance was into this small tower, by a noble flight of steps eight feet wide, through an arched gateway about six feet by ten; this arch, which as well as all the others in the building, was built of Caen stone, is adorned with curious fret-work. For the greater security of this entrance, there was a draw-bridge, under which was the common entrance into the lower apartments of the great tower. These lower apartments were two, and must have been dark and gloomy; they are divided by a partition five feet thick, which partition is continued to the top; so that the rooms were twenty-one by forty-six feet on each floor. In the lower part of the walls are several narrow openings, intended for the benefit of light and air; there are also arches in the partition wall, by which one room communicated with the other. These apartments seem to have been designed for store-rooms. In the partition wall in the centre of the building, is a well two feet nine inches in diameter, neatly wrought in the walls; which well ascends through all the stories to the top of the tower, and has a communication with every floor. On the north-east side, within the tower, is a small arched door-way, through which is a descent by steps into a vault under the small tower: here seems to have been the prison and melancholy abode of the state criminals, confined in this fortress. From the ground floor there is a winding stair-case in the east angle, which ascends to the top of the tower, and communicates with every floor; it is about five feet five inches wide; the cement still retains the impressions of the winding centres on which the arches were turned, but the stairs are much destroyed. The floor of the first story was about thirteen feet from the ground; the holes in the walls where the timbers were laid, distinctly mark every floor, but at present no wood remains in the tower. The joists were about thirteen inches by ten inches square, and about thirteen inches apart, but somewhat less in the upper floors, and extended from the outward wall to the partition. In the west angle is another stair-case, which ascends from this floor to the top of the tower, and communicates with every room. The rooms in the first story were about twenty feet high, and were probably for the accommodation of servants, &c. The apartment on the north-east side in the small tower over the prison, and into which the outward door of the grand entrance opened, opened, was on this floor, and was about thirteen feet square, and neatly wrought; the arches of the doors and windows being adorned with fret work. This room communicated with the large rooms in the great tower, through an arch about six feet by ten, which was secured by a portcullis; there being a groove well worked in the main wall, quite through to the next story. The rooms of this floor also communicated with each other, by arches in the partition wall; and there are many holes in the outward walls on every side for the admission of light, and for the annoyance of the enemy. In the north angle is a small neat room, with a fire-place in it, and was doubtless the apartment of some of the officers of the fortress. In the south-east side is a small door, most probably for such as were not admitted at the grand entrance; the wall within this door is peculiarly constructed for its security.

is

FROM hence you ascend to the second story, or third floor, on which were the apartments of state; and here the workman has shewn his greatest skill. These rooms were about thirty-two feet high, and separated by three columns, forming four grand arches curiously ornamented; the columns are about eighteen feet in height, and four in diameter. There are fire-places to the rooms, having semicircular chimney places; the arches of which, in the principal rooms, are ornamented in the same taste with the arches before mentioned. The smoke was not conveyed through funnels ascending to the top of the tower, but through small holes left for that purpose in the outer wall near to each fire place. About midway, as you ascend to the next floor, there is a narrow arched passage or gallery in the main wall, quite round the tower. The upper or fourth floor was about sixteen feet high: the roof is now entirely gone; but the stone gutters, which conveyed the water from it, through the wall to the outside, are very entire. From the upper floor, the stair-case rises ten feet higher to the top of the great tower, which is above ninety-three feet from the ground, round which is a battlement seven feet high with embrasures. At each angle is a tower, about twelve feet square, with floors and battlements above them; the whole height of these towers is about one hundred and twenty feet from the ground *. From this elevation, there is a pleasing prospect of the surrounding country; of the city and adjacent towns, with their public buildings; the barracks and dock-yard at Chatham, the meanders of the Medway, both above and below the bridge, even to its confluence with the Thames, and down into the Swin. On such an ancient pile, a serious mind cannot but reflect on the various changes that have diversified the scene below, on the battles, sieges, pestilences, fires, inundations, storms, &c. which have agitated and swept away the successive generations who have inhabited the city and adjacent towns, during the seven hundred years which have elapsed since the first building of this tower. Considering how long this fabric has been neglected, I believe there are few buildings in England of equal antiquity so perfect; nor can I quit this venerable pile without expressing my admiration at the skill and ingenuity of the reverend architect: the nice contrivance throughout every part of the building, both for conveniency and strength, must strike the eye of every curious beholder; nor can a person who has the least taste in antiquities, or ancient architecture, spend an hour more agreeable than in surveying this curious fabric †.

FROM a dateless rescript in Regist. Ross. it appears, that there was a chapel in the castle; but whether in this tower, or in what

* THERE is in the tower of the castle wall next the bridge a funnel or space in the wall, open from the bottom to the top, supposed to have been used for the secret conveyance of necessaries from the river into the castle.

† In the south-east and south-west sides of the great tower are several fissures very discernible from the top to near the bottom; where these fissures are, there appears a junction of more modern work, particularly in the inner side of the south-east wall. The facing and coin stones of the arches in this south or round tower, are not of the Caen stone, which is used in all the other arches in this building, but of the fire stone, the produce of this kingdom; from these and other appearances, sufficiently obvious to a curious eye, it will appear evident, that this part of the building is not of an equal antiquity with the rest, but was probably rebuilt after the damages the castle had sustained by the sieges in the reign of K. John.

THIS is, I think, somewhat confirmed by an order made the 10th of Henry III. (viz. in 1225, about ten years after King John besieged it) to the sheriff of Kent, to finish the great tower in Rochester Castle.

other

RECTORY NEAR STROUD, KENT.

Published by J. Hooper.

J. Bonner del.

other part, I cannot determine. It was named the King's Chapel; and the ministers that officiated in it were called king's chaplains; their stipend was 50s. a year.

THESE two views were drawn anno 1759. The first shews the castle, the cathedral, and part of the bridge, as seen from the opposite side of the river; the latter is the land side, as viewed from the north-east.

THE TEMPLE OR MANSION OF THE KNIGHTS TEMPLARS, AT STROUD.

KING Henry II. having granted to the knights templars the manor of Stroud, with the hundred of Shamell, they erected a mansion in the southern part of the parish, near the banks of the river Medway, from which the manor has ever since been called the Temple Manor.

THIS gift was confirmed to them by King John, and also by King Henry III. in the 2d year of his reign; but in the beginning of the reign of King Edward II. the great wealth and power of this community, exciting the envy of the other orders, and the avarice of divers great men, they were accused of a variety of crimes, which were not however proved against them: they were, nevertheless, Tanner says, at the instigation of the King of France, imprisoned, their goods and estates confiscated, and in the 6th year of that king, anno 1312, the whole order dissolved. Their estates were by Pope Clement V. granted to the knights hospitalers; which grant was confirmed by the King, November 28, 1313, who ordered possession to be delivered to them, saving his own and his subjects' rights, under which exception several manors and estates were granted away, and withheld from them.

POPE JOHN XXII. anno 1322, having confirmed the donation of his predecessor Clement to these knights, and in a bull anathematized all those, as well ecclesiastics as laymen, who against right kept possession of their lands, probably occasioned the act of parliament which passed the next year, wherein it was stated, that the estates

estates of the templars having been given for pious uses, the king and parliament granted that they should be assigned to other religious persons, thereby to fulfil the intention of the donors; and they were accordingly granted to the hospitallers, who held them till the 18th year of the same reign, when the prior granted the fee of this manor to the king, who by writ commanded the sheriff of Kent to take it into his hands. It remained in the Crown till the reign of Edward III. who first granted it to Mary de St. Paul countess of Pembroke for life, and in the 12th year of his reign, to her and her heirs for ever, to be held by the accustomed services. This lady at first intended to have built a religious house here; but altering her mind, she, in the 18th year of the same reign, gave it to a monastery she had lately founded at Denny in Cambridgeshire, where it remained till the general dissolution, when it was surrendered to King Henry VIII.; who, in the 32d year of his reign, granted divers possessions of that house, among which was the manor of Stroud, to Edward Elrington, Esq. who the same year sold it to Sir George Brooke, Knt. Lord Cobham and his heirs, whose grandson, in the 1st year of King James I. being convicted of treason, it escheated to the Crown, and was soon after granted to Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury; whose son and heir, William earl of Salisbury, sold it to Bernard Hyde, Esq. of London, by whom it was bequeathed to his third son Mr. John Hyde; he, in the reign of King Charles I. disposed of it to James Stuart duke of Richmond, who shortly after alienated it to — Blague of Rochester; one of whose descendants sold it to Mr. John Whitaker, who in 1780 was in possession thereof.

VERY little remains of the ancient mansion, except a spacious cellar, vaulted with chalk, and stone groins; the walls were of an extraordinary thickness. The greatest part of the present building, from its style, cannot be older than Elizabeth, or James I. It is now a farm-house.—This view was drawn anno 1759.

SALT-

Pub. 31. Aug. 1784, by C. Hooper.

Saltwood Castle, Kent.

J.L.

SALTWOOD CASTLE, KENT.

THIS castle stands near the south side of the county, about a mile to the north-west of Hythe. Harris, in his History of Kent, gives the following account of it: "The learned Dr. Gale judges this castle to have been built in the Romans' time; and saith, he found in an old manuscript, that the town of Hythe did once belong to it; and perhaps it was built, when Hythe first became a port, for its defence, and that of the adjoining sea-coast, against the piratical attempts of the Saxons. The doctor saith also, that several Roman Antiquities have been found at Newington, an adjacent village. And Doctor Plott, in his manuscript about the Roman ways in this county, observed a paved way, made after the Roman manner, all the way up the hill; not only to the castle, for that possibly, saith he, might be done by some archbishop for their own convenience, but a mile further on towards the stone street way: And I think it probable enough, that after the Romans had, by the inundation of the sea, lost their port at Stutfall, West Hythe, and Bottolph's Bridge, and did at last remove to the present Hythe, they made that causeway to accommodate the way to Durovernam, or Canterbury. Dr. Plott saith also, that an anchor was plowed up at Saltwood Castle, in the valley, which seems to indicate, that the sea once covered that place, and made a harbour near this castle. Kilburne saith, this castle was built by Oesc, or Uik, son of Hengist, king of Kent, which perhaps was only a repair, or an enlargement of the old one built before by the Romans; as was also what was done to it by Henry of Essex, Baron Raleigh, and for a time lord warden of the ports, who held it of the archbishop of Canterbury in King Henry the Second's time. But being accused of treason by Robert de Montfort, for cowardly deserting the King's standard at a battle in Wales; and being vanquished by him in single combat, which he demanded in his own vindication, and left for dead upon the spot, King Henry II. seized upon the castle, and kept

VOL.

E c

it

it in his possession all his reign, as did King Richard I. after him; but King John in his 1st year restored it to the archbishop, to whose fee it had been given at first by Halden, A. D. 1036, a great man in the Saxon times. In King Henry the Second's time it was accounted an honour, and had several places held of it, as appears from a passage in Matt. Paris, and cited by Lambard; wherein he saith, King Henry II. restored to Thomas Becket (on their accommodation) all his goods and possessions, and ordered a meeting of the knights and eminent men holding of the honour of Saltwood, to enquire into the archbishop's rights and fees, in order to his being put in possession of them again.

"ARCHBISHOP COURTNEY built very much here, beautifying and enlarging it; and either he, which is most probable, or some of his predecessors, enclosed a park about it, and made it an usual place of his residence. And Lambard tells a pleasant story of the pride and loftiness of this great prelate, which was transacted here: Some poor men of his manor of Wingham, having carried him some straw or hay, not decently in carts, as ought to be done to an archbishop, but slovenly in sacks on their horses backs; he summoned them to the castle of Saltwood, and after having rated them soundly with proper efforts of wrath, he bound them by oath to obey him, and then enjoined them for penance, that they should all march in procession, bareheaded and barelegged, with each one a sack of straw on his back, so open at the mouth that the straw might appear, to disgrace them for their disrespect. It continued part of the archiepiscopal revenue till the 29th of King Henry VIII.; but then Thomas Cranmer exchanged it with that prince for other lands. And King Edward VI. in his first year, granted it to John earl of Warwick, and Joan his wife; but somehow coming to the Crown again, that king in his fourth year, granted it to Edward Lord Clinton; and in the last year of his reign, confirmed it to him, together with the Bailywick of Hythe. But not long after, he sold Saltwood to Mr. Thomas Broudnax, who parted with it the same way to Knatchbull. And he in the 18th of Queen Elizabeth, alienated it to Crispe, who sold it again to another Knatchbull: And Mr. Reginald Knatchbull, in the 31st of Queen Elizabeth, sold it to William Gibbons, from whom in two years time it went the same way to Sir Norton Knatchbull: and he in four years after demised it to Robert Cranmer, Esq. by whose daughter and heir, Ann Cranmer, it passed in marriage to Sir Arthur Harris, of Crixey, in Essex: And his son, Sir Cranmer Harris, alienated it to Sir William Boteler, father to Sir Oliver Boteler, the possessor in Phillipot's time; and his son, Sir Philip Boteler, A. D. 1712, sold it to Brooke Bridges, Esq. sen. together with the Grange Farm, and several other lands." It is now the property of Sir Brooke Bridges, Baronet.

To the above may be added, that Henry VIII. in the 32d year of his reign, granted the office of constable of this castle to Sir Thomas Cheiney, Knt. treasurer of the household, and warden of the Cinque Ports, with an allowance of 9l. 2s. 6d. per annum. Kilburne says, that "April 6th, 1580, (by reason of an earthquake then happening) part of the castle fell down."

ON examining these ruins, notwithstanding the respectable authorities quoted by Harris, every stone of them evidently appears to have been laid by the Normans: possibly a fort might have stood here in the time of the Romans and Saxons, on the site of which the present building was perhaps erected.

DR. STUKELEY in his Itin. Curios. Iter 5. p. 131. thus describes this place. "I visited Saltwood Castle in hopes to find something Roman, as is reported; it is a very strong seat of the archbishops; the outer wall has towers and battlements, and a deep ditch, within and one side stands the main body of the place, two great and high towers at the gate of this, over which are the founder's arms, Archbishop Courtney, in two escutcheons; the first impaled with those of the see, the other plain, a label over three plates. This inner work has a stronger and higher wall, with a broad embattled parapet at the top; within is a court, but the lodgings are all demolished; the floor of the ruinous chapel is strongly strongly vaulted : in the middle of the court is a large square well, which is the only thing I saw that looked like Roman. It is said that hereabouts anchors are dug up ; which if true is not owing to the seas coming so high, as the vulgar think, for that is impossible, but to an iron forge of the Romans, conveniently placed where so much wood grows so near the sea and so many ports ; they say too that Roman coins are found at Newington, not far off."—This drawing was made anno 1773.

UPNOR CASTLE.

THIS castle stands on the western bank of the river Medway, a small distance below Chatham Dock, which is situated on the opposite shore.

UPNOR Castle was, according to Kilburne, built by Queen Elizabeth, in the 3d year of her reign, for the defence of the river ; it is chiefly of stone, its external figure a parallelogram, much longer than broad, the longest side facing the water ; it has two towers at its extremities ; the southernmost is appropriated for the residence of the Governor ; the entrance is in the center of the west side.

ON the east side next the water, are the remains of some stone walls, which seem to have formed a salient angle like a modern ravelin ; here probably was a platform and battery ; this is now covered by high pallisadoes, with a crane for shipping powder.

As a fort, this castle was never of much consequence, especially as it was very injudiciously placed ; it has therefore very properly been converted into a powder magazine.

THE establishment, according to Mr. Haisted, is a governor, store-keeper, clerk of the cheque, a master gunner, and twelve other gunners ; formerly all the forts between this castle and Sheerness, were subordinate to it, and were under the command of its governor. In the military establishment for the year 1659, the governor's pay was only 5s. per diem, the remainder of the garrison

JENOR CASTLE, KENT.

Published the 20th of November 1842 by S. Hooper.

Published June 27, 1874, by S. Hooper.

West Gate, Canterbury.

J. S. Parker, engraver.

garrison consisted of a gunner, a servant, two corporals, one drum, and thirty soldiers, with an allowance of 8d. per diem for fire and candle.

ON the top of the bank, a small distance south-west of the castle, is a modern-built barrack, capable of holding a company, where there is generally a subaltern's party of invalids; but when there is a camp on the opposite shore, or soldiers in the barracks at Chatham, this duty is done by a detachment from thence: the gunners are also lodged here; the store-keeper has a good house and garden close behind the castle. The present governor is Major William Browne, whose salary is 10s. per diem.

THE following gentlemen appear to have been governors of this castle at the times specified.

ANNO 1684. Robert Minors, Esq. governor and captain.

1703. Colonel Rous.

1735. Lieutenant-Colonel John Guise.

1770. Major-General Deane.

1775. Lieutenant-General James Murray.

1782. Major William Browne.

THIS view shews the west or land side of the castle, and was drawn anno 1757.

THE WEST GATE OF CANTERBURY.

THIS view represents the west gate of the city of Canterbury, the church of Holy Cross, West Gate, the river Stour, and part of the city wall, with one of its towers.—It was drawn in the year 1749.

THE west gate was built by Archbishop Simon Sudbury, in the time of King Richard II. on the site of a former gate, mentioned shortly after the Conquest, by Edmerus, the monk of Canterbury. It now is, and has been ever since its erection, the common goal of this city, as well for debtors as malefactors.

OVER the ancient gate, stood a church called the Holy Cross of West Gate, which belonged to the priory of St. Gregory; but being taken down with the gate, the present church retaining the name, was built in its stead, about the year 1381.

THE wall of this city is of great antiquity, as appears from the arches of Roman brick, at Ridingate, and the Castle-yard: its exact age is not however known; but that the city was walled before the Norman Conquest, is evident from the charter of King Ethelbert, which describes the lands granted for building the monastery of St. Augustine, as lying under the east wall of the city of Canterbury. This is farther proved by the testimony of Roger Hoveden; who relating the cruelties used by the Danes, when they took and plundered that place, anno 1011, says, they killed many of the inhabitants, by casting them headlong from the wall of the city.

THIS wall was defended by twenty-one towers, and furrounded by a ditch, originally one hundred and fifty feet broad.

ON December 25, 1647, a disturbance having arisen between the townsmen and one Page, a diffenter, then mayor, on the subject of keeping Christmas-Day, and he being fearful of an insurrection, obtained troops from the committee of the county, who, to punish the townsmen, threw down part of the city wall, near St. Mildred's Church, and burned the gates. These were afterwards repaired by Archbishop Juxon, whose arms, with those of the see, are on the West Gate, St. George's Gate, and Bur Gate.

THE mill seen in this view, stands on the foundation of one mentioned in Domesday Book, as belonging to the archbishop, but then in the hands of the canons of St. Gregory. It has since returned to the archbishopric, and continues a parcel of its demesnes.

West Malling Abbey, Kent.
Pub. as May 1784 by S. Hooper

Sparrow Sculp.

WEST-MALLING ABBEY.

THIS was an abbey for Benedictine nuns, founded, says Tanner, in the time of William Rufus, by Gundulph, bishop of Rochester, as appears by a charter in the Monasticon. Phillipot places this foundation in the year 1090, and in Leland's Collectanea it is said to have happened anno 1106.

To this nunnery was given the manor of Corugerd, by King Henry I. Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, bestowed on it the manor of Little Malling; and Hubert, archbishop of the same see, endowed it with the church of East Malling. These donations were confirmed both by William Rufus, Henry I. John, and Edward III. Divers instruments, confirming privileges to this house, are to be found in the Registrum Rossense, particularly those of infangentheof and outfangentheof.

A. D. 1190, temp. Richard I. according to Stowe, both the town of Malling and this nunnery were destroyed by fire. By whom it was rebuilt, does not appear; probably the nuns were assisted by the contributions of pious persons.

LAMBARD, in his Perambulation of Kent, speaking of Malling, says, "the towne was first given to Burhricus, the bishop of Rochester, by King Edmund, the brother of Athelstane, under the name of Three Plough Lands in Mealinges. About one hundreth and fifty yeeres after which time, Gundulphus, a successour in that see, as you have read before, having amplified the buildings, and multiplied the number of the monkes in his own cittie, raised an abbay of women here also; which (being dedicate to the name of the Blessed Virgin) during all his life he governed himselfe; and lying at the point of death he recommended to the charge of one Avise (a chosen woman) to whom notwithstanding he would not deliver the pastorall staffe, before she had promised canonicall obedience and fidelitie to the see of Rochester, and had protested by othe, that there should neither abasse nor nonne, be from from henceforth received into the house, without the consent and privitie of him and his successors.

“ Now whither this Rus propinquum, and politique provision, were made of a blinde zeale that the man had to advance superstition, or of a vaine glorie to increase authoritie in his succession, or els of a foresight that the monkes (which were for the most part called monachi, of sole living; by the same rule that montes have their name of removing) might have a convenient place to resort unto, and where they might (caute at the least) quench the heats kindled of their good cheare and idlenes, God knoweth, and I will not judge: but well I wote, that this was a very common practice in Papistry; for as St. Augustine’s had Sepulchres, St. Alban’s, Sopewell; Shene, Sion: the knights of Rhodes, the nonnes of Clerkenwell; all adjoyning, or subject to such obedience; even so Sempringham, and some others of that sort, had bothe male and female within one house and wall together, the world being (in the mean while) borne in hand, that they were no men but images, as Phryne said sometime of Xenocrates.”

If Gundulph himself governed this nunnery any considerable time, as here seems expressed, the foundation must have been earlier than is stated in Leland’s Collectanea, as that bishop died March 7, 1107.

THE charter of King Edmund, mentioned by Lambard, which is printed in the Monasticon from the Textus Roffensis, has a circumstance that at first sight may seem somewhat extraordinary, which is, that amidst the respectable and reverend names of the king’s brother and mother, two archbishops, several bishops and priests, and divers of the nobility, who witnessed this charter, appears that of Ælfgefu, the king’s concubine, who in her signature thus particularises her station, “† Ælfgefu concubina regis affui;” it may, to reconcile this to our ideas of propriety, be necessary to observe, that concubinage did not then mean what it does at present, but was a kind of legal contract, inferior to that of marriage, in use when there was considerable disparity between
the Wincheap Gate, Canterbury, Kent.

Pub. 29 May 1784 by S. Hooper

the parties; the Roman law not suffering a man to marry a woman greatly beneath him in birth and condition; but allowing such woman to be kept as a concubine, provided the man had no wife. Concubines were also permitted by several popes; and the seventeenth canon of the council of Toledo declares, that he who with a faithful wife, keeps a concubine, is excommunicated; but if the concubine served him as a wife, so that he had only one woman under the title of concubine, he should not be rejected from the communion. This accounts for the name of Ælfgesu being found in such company, on so solemn an occasion; which could not have happened, had the character of concubine been deemed either sinful or dishonourable.

THE revenues of this abbey were valued, the 26th of Henry VIII. at 218l. 4s. 2d. ob. per annum, Dugdale: 245l. 10s. 2d. ob. Speed. It was dissolved the 29th of October, 1539, being the 30th of Henry VIII. by the surrender of Margaret Vernon, the last abbess, and ten of her nuns: soon after which, viz. on December 7th following, the king assigned the following annual pensions to the abbesses and nuns here, for their natural lives: To Margaret Vernon, abbess, 40l. To Felix Cocks, Arminal Bere, Margaret Gyles, Joan Randall, Betrice Williams and Rosa Morton, nuns, 3l. 6s. 8d. To Lecetitia Duke, Juliana Whetnall, Joane Hull, Elizabeth Pympe, Agnes West, nuns, 2l. 13s. 4d. each.

ANNO 1553, here was paid out of the rents of this late nunnery 10l. in annuities and pensions to six nuns, apparently the same as mentioned before, but in that short time thus disguised and misnamed; to Agnes White, Elizabeth Pimpe, Johanna Hall, Joan Randulph, Juliana Wetenhall, and Lettice Buck, 2l. 13s. 4d. each.

THE site was granted in exchange to the archbishop of Canterbury, the 32d of Henry VIII. but in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth was resumed, and in the 12th of that queen granted to Henry Cobham, alias Brook, whose son, Henry Lord Cobham, being attainted in the 2d year of King James I. the Crown granted it in lease to Sir ——— Fitz-James, who sold his interest therein to Sir Robert Bret, by whose widow it went to Humphry Delind; but the fee-simple remained in the Crown till the 21st of James I. when it was granted to John Rayney, Esq. This grant was confirmed in the succeeding reign. It afterwards came into the possession of Sir John Rayney, of whom it was purchased by Edward Honeywood, Esq. whose grandson, Frazer Honeywood, Esq. a banker in London, succeeding to it, pulled down the old house, then occupied by one Segar, a fellmonger, and with the materials, at a great expence, erected the present seat, preserving as much as possible the ancient Gothic style and form. He also repaired the out-offices, and made it his residence; and dying without issue, devised it to Sir John Honeywood, Bart. of Elmsted, in this county, and his heirs by his first lady.

THE following particulars of the present state of this abbey were communicated by John Thorpe, Esq. of Bexley, in Kent.

THIS house is most delightfully situated, being washed by a fine rivulet, which, rising at the hamlet of St. Leonards, runs by the side of the abbey, and through the gardens. In the meadows above the gardens, large square excavations are still visible; these were formerly the fish-ponds for the supply of the nunnery.

ALTHOUGH the body of this house was pulled down, and rebuilt by Mr. Honeywood, many of the original offices are still remaining, particularly an ancient chapel, some time used as a dissenting meeting-house, but now converted into a dwelling; other buildings of two stories, at present serving for stables, hay-lofts and granaries; but the object most worthy notice, is a handsome tower of the church, whose front is decorated with intersecting arches, and zig-zag ornaments, similar to those on the west front of Rochester Cathedral, built also by Bishop Gundulf.

FROM the foundations discovered in levelling the ground, it appears, that this abbey consisted of two courts, or quadrangles, with cloisters, a spacious hall, and that the church had another tower similar to that now standing.

THE

THE burying-place seems to have been on the south side of the church; as, on digging there, great quantities of human bones have been thrown up; as also two stone coffins, with skeletons in them; the bones were all again interred, but the lids of the coffins were laid down as a pavement for the east entrance into the tower. On these there are no inscriptions remaining; but they are ornamented with some circles on the tops, and a right line running down the center, crossed in two or three places with some foliage. Divers rings and other trinkets, as also some pieces of old coin, have been found at different times in clearing away the rubbish.

OVER a gate-way, at the west end of the building, is carved in stone, a heart distilling drops of blood; and on the other side, on an antique heater shield, are these arms; ermine, a crozier in bend sinister, on a chief three annulets; probably the arms of one of the bishops of Rochester, or some benefactor. In the square court over the door, on the right side going into the cloister, are two angels, with scrolls of scriptural sentences cut in relieve, in an old character; one has, Benedictus Deus in Domo ejus; the other, Et in omnibus Operibus suis. Over a passage in the western wall, is, in the same character, . . . R. Merton.

AT some distance west of the abbey, on the left hand going up the town, is a very ancient stone building, coeval with the abbey, and called the Old Jail. It has narrow windows, and walls of great thickness. Tradition says, this was the prison belonging to the abbey, that the underground or cellar part was the dungeon, and the upper story the prison for persons guilty of smaller offences. At present it is used for drying and stowing hops. —This drawing was made anno 1762.

WINCHEAP GATE, CANTERBURY.

ALTHOUGH this gate was not remarkable either for any particular beauty or antiquity, yet, as it frequently occurs in the history and descriptions of Canterbury, and has lately been demolished, many persons will probably be glad to see its appearance here preserved.

THE date of its erection is not known ; but both its style and materials speak it not older than the time of Queen Elizabeth, or rather that of King James I.

It was mostly built with brick, and led from the suburbs called Wincheap, from whence it takes its name. Over the arch on the outside was the figure of a heart, enclosing the word, Welcome ; and on the inside, in the same figure, Farewel !—a conceit meant to salute the coming stranger with a hearty welcome, and to bid the departing traveller a hearty farewell.

THIS gate was pulled down a few years ago, in order, as was pretended, to widen the road. At present a ruinous gap is left in its place, which, with the other breaches in the walls, give no advantageous impression to strangers entering the city.—This view was drawn anno 1755.

LAN-

LANCASHIRE.

Ormskirk, Poulton, Prescot, Rochdale, and Ulverston; with 894 villages, 61 parishes, 12 vicarages, sends 14 Members to Parliament, pays five parts of the land-tax, and supplies 800 of the national militia. Its principal rivers are Lun, Ulf, Thurston, Fosse, Winster, Wire, Ribble, Roche, Dane, Mersey, Irwell, Calder, Derwent, Medlock, Hodder, Duddon, Fild, Tand, and Weaver. Its product, &c. is corn, barley, oats, flax, hemp, large oxen, spotted deer, salmon, coals, turf, stone, linen and woollen stuffs, and excellent ale. Its principal places are Pendil and Clougho Hills, Cartmel and Fournes Falls, Blackstone Edge, Wulf Crag, Wharton Crag, and Beacon, Wierdale, Bowland, and Simon's-Wood Forests, Winander and Merton Lakes, Chatmos, and several others near the sea; Spaw Water near Latham Park, Walney Island, Towley Isles, Old Barrow Isle, Pile Fondray, Lancaster, Preston, Pile, Leven, and Formby Sands, Mullum Castle, and the Burning Well near Wigan.

THE Roman, Saxon, or Danish encampments in this county, are at Ribchester and Manchester near Manchester. There are but two Roman Military Ways in this county, which enter from the north, the one from Westmoreland, the other from Yorkshire. The tenth journey of Antoninus goes upon that from Westmoreland, and the second journey upon that from Yorkshire. The tenth comes from Alone in Cumberland (now Whitby Castle) to Galacum in Westmoreland, (now Shap) from thence through Kendal and Burton to Bremetonacum, (now Lancaster) which, according to the Itinerary is 27 miles; from Lancaster it proceeds to Coccium, (now Ribchester) 20 miles, and then to Mancunium, (now Manchester) 17 miles. A branch goes from Almonbury to Manchester on the south. The ridge of hills that divides this county from Yorkshire, have on each side a Roman Military Way.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

Anchor Hill near Ribchester
 Burfough Abbey near Ormskirk
 Cartmel Priory
 Clithero Castle
 Cockerfand Abbey
 Fournes Abbey
 Gleaston Castle
 Holland Castle
 Hornby Castle
 Lancaster Castle

Latham Church near Ormskirk
 Manchester College
 Old Abbey near Manchester
 Ormskirk Church
 Peel Castle
 Thurland Castle near Hornby
 Whaley Abbey S.W. of Clithero
 Winwick Church, N. of Warrington
 A Cavern near Leek, E. of Kirkby Lonsdale

Clithero Castle, Lancashire.

LANCASHIRE.

CLITHERO CASTLE.

THIS castle is situated on the summit of a conical insulated crag, or rugged lime-stone rock, which suddenly rises from a very fine vale, in which towards the north, at the distance of half a mile, runs the river Ribble, whose source is not far off; and a mile to the south, Pendle Hill seems to lift its head above the clouds: it is said by Dugdale and others to have been built about the year 1178, by Robert de Lacy, lord of the honour of Pontefract, and the fourth descendant from Ibert, who came over with William the Conqueror. At present it exhibits a very different appearance from what it wore, when that drawing was made, from which the Antiquarian Society published a print in the year 1753.

TIME alone has effected this alteration. The old gate and chapel were demolished in the civil wars. Large pieces of the wall, strongly cemented, still lye on the side, and at the foot of the rock, probably disjointed, and thrown thither by the force of gunpowder. Nothing but a square tower, once the keep, and some of the bounding walls are remaining, within which his Grace the Duke of Montague has built a handsome embattled house for the habitation of the steward of the honour, which is one of the most valuable and extensive royalties in the kingdom.

AT the end of the rock stands the town of Clithero, which, though small, is a borough by prescription, governed by two bailiffs, and sends two members to parliament. It has a market on Monday, and annually three fairs. From the ridge of this rock gush out a number of springs of the purest water.

THE following particulars respecting this castle were communicated by an ingenious correspondent, who requested that his name should not be mentioned :

THE honour of Clithero was the property of the Lacies from the time of William the Conqueror, who in the first year of his reign reduced all Blackburnshire into one lordship, which he gave to Ilbert de Lacy, one of his Norman followers, with the honour of Pontefract, and other possessions in Yorkshire.

DUGDALE appears to have been guilty of an error, in attributing the building of this castle to Robert Lacy, the last of the male line of that family ; as both the castle, and chapel therein, are mentioned in a charter by Hugh de la Vall before that time. This De la Vall had, for a short time, a grant of the estate upon a forfeiture, but it was soon restored to Lacy. That grant was confirmed by Henry I. with the sign or seal of the cross, many of the bishops and barons witnessing it in the same manner.

ANNO 1138, the 3d of King Stephen, when David king of Scots was opposed by many northern barons, his grand nephew William was dispatched into Yorkshire, to fight the van of the English army, which had advanced to Clithero ; he surprised and cut them all to pieces, or took them prisoners, and committed great disorders in the country. Historia Rich. Prioris de Haguestald.

THE following account of Clithero castle is said to have been written by the late John duke of Montague :

“ THE honour of Clithero, or lordship of Blackburnshire, was the estate of the Lacies. When John de Lacy was created earl of Lincoln by Henry III. the honour of Clithero, or lordship of Blackburnshire, became parcel of the earldom of Lincoln.

ALICE, the daughter and heiress of Henry de Lacy, earl of Lincoln, married Thomas Plantagenet, earl of Lancaster ; but she having no children by him, gave all her estate to Henry earl of Lancaster, her husband's brother ; upon which King Henry III. created him earl of Lincoln ; so that the earldom of Lincoln, of which

Pub. by J. H. & J. H. Cooper.

Kertmele Priory, Lancashire.

which the honour of Clithero, or lordship of Blackburnshire, was part, became parcel of the earldom of Lancaster.

HENRY, son of the afore-named Henry earl of Lancaster, was, by Edward III. created first duke of Lancaster.

HE left one daughter, Blanch, his only child and heir, who married John of Gaunt, who, in her right, was created duke of Lancaster, and earl of Lincoln; so that the lands of the earldom of Lincoln, of which the honour of Clithero was part, became parcel of the duchy of Lancaster.

HENRY duke of Lancaster, son of John of Gaunt, became king of England by the name of Henry IV. so that he was king of England, duke of Lancaster, earl of Lincoln, &c. which dukedom and earldom have been in the Crown ever since.

THIS honour continued in the Crown till the restoration, when it was granted, by Charles II. to George duke of Albemarle, from whose family it came to Ralph earl, afterwards duke of Montagu, and now is in that noble family."

IN an act of resumption, 1st Henry VII. 1485, there is an exception in favour of Lawrence Leyner and Richard Oroll, the first porter and the second constable of the castle of Cliderow, in co. Lancaster.—This view was drawn anno 1772.

KERTMELE, OR CARTMELE PRIORY.

THIS was a priory of regular canons, of the order of St. Augustine, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and founded A. D. 1188, by William Mareschal, earl of Pembroke; who by his charter directed that it should for ever remain an independent priory; that it should never be raised to the dignity of an abbey; and that upon the death of the prior, the canons should present to him, or his successor, two of their convent, one of whom he was to nominate to the office of prior. Having settled these and some other particulars, he concludes in the following manner: "This house I have founded for the increase of our holy religion, giving and granting to it every kind of liberty the heart can conceive, or the mouth mouth utter ; and whosoever shall in any way infringe these their immunities, or injure the said monastery, may he incur the curse of God, of the Blessed Virgin, and all the saints, as well as my particular malediction."

By two different charters these canons were endowed by the above-named founder with all his lands of Kertmele, together with the church and its dependencies ; likewise the church of Balifar, with the chapel of Balunadan and its appendages ; also the town of Kiros in Ireland, with the advowson of its church, and all appurtenances.

ADA de WINTERTHWAITER, Thomas de Kelistal, and Elias, son of Goditha de Stavely, were benefactors to this house. The charters of the founder were confirmed by Edward III. but probably had been called in question in the reign of Henry III. ; for by the rolls of the 7th of that king, cited in Madox's History of the Exchequer, it appears, that the prior of Cartmele paid a fine of one palfrey to have his charter of liberties amended.

IN the 26th of Henry VIII. this priory was rated at 91l. 16s. 3d. per annum ; Dugdale, 124l. 2s. 1d. ; Speed, 212l. 11s. 10d. second valuation. Here at the dissolution were reckoned ten religious and thirty-eight servants. The bells, lead, and goods were estimated at 174l. 13s. 9½. The debts owing by the house amounted to 59l. 12s. 8d. Anno 1553, here remained in charge 2l. in fees. The site of the monastery was granted 38th Hen. VIII. to Thomas Holcroft. The church is now converted to parochial uses ; the patron thereof, Sir James Lowther.

MR. PENNANT, in his tour through Scotland, gives the following account of the present state of the remains of this convent :

" THREE miles from the shore is Cartmel, a small town, with most irregular streets, lying in a vale, surrounded by high hills. The gateway of the monastery of regular canons of St. Austin, founded in 1188, by William Mareschal, earl of Pembroke, is still standing. But this had long been holy ground, having, about the year 677, been given to St. Cuthbert, by Elfred, king of Northumberland, with all its inhabitants still British. The church is large, and in form of a cross ; the length is one hundred and fifty-fifty-seven feet; the transept one hundred and ten; the height fifty-seven. The steeple is most singular, the tower being a square within a square; the upper part being set diagonally within the lower. The inside of the church is handsome and spacious: the centre supported by four large and fine clustered pillars: the west part more modern than the rest, and the pillars octagonal. The choir is beautiful, surrounded with stalls, whose tops and pillars are finely carved with foliage, and with the instruments of the passion above.

ON one side is the tomb-stone of William de Walton, with a cross on it. He was either first or second prior of this place.—The inscription is only, Hic jacet Frater Wilelmus de Walton, Prior de Cartmel.

ON the other is a magnificent tomb of a Harrington and his lady; both lye recumbent beneath a fine carved and open work arch, decorated with variety of superstitious figures; and on the surbase are grotesque forms of chaunting monks. He lyes with his legs across; a sign that he obtained that privilege by the merits of a pilgrimage. He is said to have been once of the Harringtons of Wrasholm Tower; his lady a Huddleston of Millam Castle. It is probable that his are the effigies of Sir John de Harrington, who, in 1305, was summoned by Edward I. with numbers of other gallant gentlemen, to meet him at Carlisle, and attend him on his expedition into Scotland; and was then knighted, along with Prince Edward, with bathing, and other sacred ceremonies.

THE monument erected by Christopher Rawlinson, of Cark Hall, in Cartmel, deserves mention, being in memory of his grand-father, father and mother; the last a Monk, descended from a Thomas Monk of Devonshire, by Frances Plantagenet, daughter and co-heir of Arthur Viscount Lisle, son of Edward IV. and this Christopher dying without issue, was the last male by the mother's side of that great line.

IN a side chapel is the burial place of the Lowthers; among other monuments is a neat but small one of the late Sir William."

—This view was drawn anno 1772.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

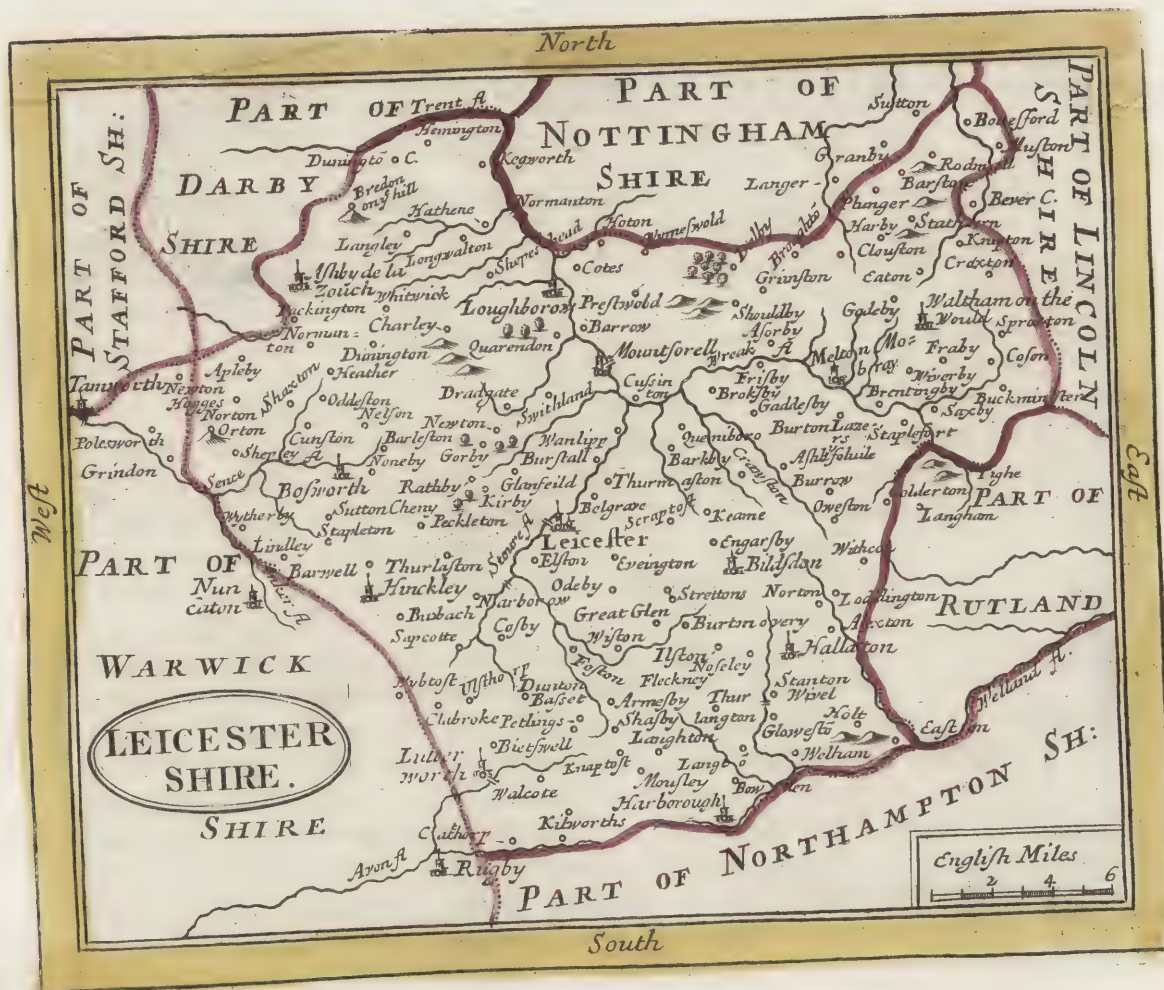

THE CASTLE OF ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH.

(PLATE I.)

ASHBY, styled de la Zouch from its having formerly belonged to a family of that name, is situated in the hundred of West Goscote, near the north-west extremity of the county, bordering upon Derbyshire.

THIS manor, after the extinction of the male line of the Zouches, in the 1st of Henry IV. came to Sir Hugh Burnell, Knight of the garter, by marriage with Joice, the heiress of that family. From him it devolved to James Butler, earl of Ormond and Wiltshire; who being attainted on account of his adherence to the party of Henry VI. it escheated to the Crown, and was in the 1st year of Edward IV. granted by that king to Sir William Hastings, in consideration of his great services: he was also created a baron, chamberlain of the household, captain of Calais, and knight of the garter; and had licence to make a park, and crenellate or fortify several of his houses, amongst which was the building here represented. The two ruined towers seen in this view are said to be of his construction; the other parts are evidently of later date. Of these towers Burton, in his Description of Leicestershire, mentions only one: his words are, speaking of the Lord Hastings, "who built there a large and fair house, and one stone tower of great height, strength, and excellent workmanship." This lord was seized at the council-board, and within two hours after, beheaded in the tower, by order of Richard III.

LELAND, in his Itinerary, says, Lord Hastings obtained the grant of Ashby de la Zouch, partly by a title, and partly by money paid; and in vol. VI. page 114 and 115, relates, that for the building

LEICESTERSHIRE

IS an inland county, that was included in the principality of the Caritani before the arrival of the Romans, and during their government of the island was comprized in their province of Flavia Cæsariensis, their third district, which extended from the Thames to the Humber. During the Saxon Heptarchy, this, with 16 other counties, was comprehended in the extensive kingdom of Mercia, the seventh established, which commenced in 582, and ended in 827, under 18 kings. Since the Norman Conquest, England has been divided into circuits, when this was included in the Midland. It is in the province of Canterbury and diocese of Lincoln, being bounded on the north by Nottinghamshire, south by Northamptonshire, east by Lincolnshire and Rutlandshire, and west by Derbyshire and Warwickshire. It is nearly of an elliptical form, and is separated from Warwickshire by the Watling-Street. It contains 560,640 square acres, 695 square miles, is 33 miles long, 28 broad, and 100 in circumference; having 18,702 houses, 112,000 inhabitants, divided into six hundreds, 200 parishes, 81 vicarages, 12 market towns, viz. Leicester, (the county town) Harborough, Melton-Mowbray, Bosworth, Lutterworth, Ashby de la Zouch, Mount-Sorrel, Hallaton, Bilsdon Hinkley, Loughborough, borough, and Waltham on the Wold; the chief rivers are the Stour, Welland, Wreck, Avon, Anker, Swift, Sence, and the Eye; the most noted places are Mount Sorrel, Charnwood and Leicester Forests, Dalby Wood, and several Parks, with the Vale of Belvoir. It sends four Members to Parliament, pays nine parts of the land-tax, and provides 560 men to the national militia. Its product, &c. is corn, beans, cattle, hogs, fine sheep, large horses, rich pastures, long wool, and pit coals. The air is gentle, mild, and temperate. At Segs-hill, or Six-hill, seven miles from Leicester, is a Roman tumuli, the boundary of six parishes, on which are their boundary stones or marks. There is a mineral water near Ashby de la Zouch, called Griffydham.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

THE only Roman, Saxon, or Danish encampments in this county are, one near Burrow Hill, Erdburrow, and near Highcross, on the borders of Warwickshire.

THE Roman Military Ways in this county are few; Highcross is said to stand on a Vicinal Way, not the Watling-Street, as by many imagined. Near it is a tumulus, called Claudbury Bush, supposed the burial place of one Claudius. The Watling-Street does not enter this county, but the Foss, which commences at Saltfleet, passes through Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, and enters Leicestershire near Burton, in its way from Willoughby in Nottinghamshire, and from thence, in a south-west direction, proceeds to Leicester, (the Vernometo of the Romans, according to some, but Camden called it Ratæ) and thence to Brinklow, agreeable to the eighth journey of Antoninus, who describes it in the following manner, viz. From Lincoln, (the Lindum of Antoninus) it is 14 miles to Newark (Crococolanum) from thence 14 more to Willoughby, (Margidunum) and 12 more brings you to Leicester, (Vernometum) from whence it is 12 more to Brinklow, (Ratis) whence it proceeds to Warwick, through Highcross and Claybrook, (the Bennones of Antoninus, from whence Bensford Bridge, not far from it, is said to have some allusion.) Hence it crossed the Watling-Street in its way to Chester, and proceeds to its end in Dorsetshire.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

All-Saints Church in Leicester	Kirby Billers near Melton Mowbray
Ashby de la Zouch Palace	Laund Abbey, E. of Billfdon
Belvoir Castle	Lutterworth Pulpit
Bosworth Field	Leicester Abbey, John of Ghent's Cellar,
Bradgate, N.N.W. of Leicester	Hospital, Cross, and Jewry Wall
Dalby upon the Wolds	Melton Mowbray Church
Donnington Castle	Mount Sorrel Castle
Gareton Park	Olverston Priory
Grace Dieu Nunnery, near Ashby de la	Stokerston Church near Haladon
Zouch	Swinesford Church
Hugh's Castle at Hinkley	Ulverscroft Priory near Mount Sorrel

Abbey de la Zouch, Leicestershire. Pl. 1.

Pub. in Oct. 1784, by J. Hooper.

Pub. in Oct. 1841, by J. Hooper.

Abby de la Zouch, Leicestershire. Pl. 2.

W. H. Sturt, del.

building or repairing of his castle here, he took the lead from off Belvoir Castle, which had been committed to his keeping, the owner Lord Ros having forfeited it by taking part with Henry VI. and also that he plundered another seat belonging to the same lord, called Stoke D'Albanye, and carried part of the materials to his castle, at Ashby de la Zouch.

IN November, 1485, the attainder of this lord was taken off by Henry VII. after the battle of Bosworth-Field, and the estates restored to the family; since which Ashby de la Zouch has regularly descended to the present earl of Huntingdon, many of whose ancestors resided here, and are buried in the parochial church, of which he is patron.

AT this castle King James I. was entertained by the then earl, with his whole court, for many days, during which time dinner was always served up by thirty poor knights, with gold chains and velvet gowns.

IN the year 1648 it was demolished by order of the parliament, the town having been made a garrison for the king by Henry, earl of Huntingdon, and his son created Lord Loughborough. It was called the maiden garrison, because never taken by the parliamentary forces.—This view was drawn anno 1759.

(PLATE II.)

THIS view was taken from a station directly opposite to that from which plate I. was drawn; whereby the inside of that tower, whose outside was there shewn, here becomes visible; by its remains it seems to have been once a very magnificent structure, and gives a good idea of the gloomy mansions of our ancient barons.—This drawing was made anno 1759.

L I N C O L N.

NEWPORT GATE.

THIS gate is universally held to be a Roman building. It is not taken notice of as such either by Leland or Camden, though the former mentions it in his enumeration of the gates of Lincoln. Dr. Stukeley, speaking of it in his Itinerary, thus expresses himself: "The northern (gate,) called Newport Gate, is the noblest remnant of this fort in Britain, as far as I know. Upon the first sight of it I was struck with admiration, as well of its noble simplicity, as that hitherto it should not have been taken notice of. 'Tis a vast semicircle of stones of very large dimensions, and, by what I could perceive, laid without mortar, connected only by their cuneiform shape. This magnificent arch is sixteen feet diameter, the stones four feet thick at bottom; from the injuries of time, but worse of hands, is somewhat luxated; yet seems to have a joint in the middle, not a key-stone; on both sides, towards the upper part, are laid horizontal stones of great dimensions, some ten or twelve feet long, to take off the pressure, very judiciously adapted. This arch rises from an impost of large moldings, some part of which, especially on the left-hand side, are still discoverable. Below, on both sides, was a postern, or foot-passage made of like stones; but against that on the left is a house built; and when I went down into the cellar I found a chimney set before it. The ground here in the street has been very much raised, and the top of the wall is of later workmanship. It is, indeed, a most venerable piece of antiquity, and what a lover of architecture would be hugely delighted withall. They that look upon a gate among the vestiges of the Forum of Nerva at Rome, will think they see the counterpart of this; but of the two, this has the most grandeur in aspect."

LINCOLNSHIRE

IS a maritime county, on the eastern coast of the island, included by the antient inhabitants in their principality of Coritani; but after the arrival of the Romans was belonging to the province of Flavia Cæsariensis. On the establishment of the Heph-tarchy, it belonged to the kingdom of Mercia, the last established, but by far the most extensive, which commenced in 582, and ended in 827, having been governed by 18 kings. At present it is in the province of Canterbury, diocese of its own bishop, and is included in the midland circuit. It is of an oblong form, being bounded on the north by the Humber, which separates it from Yorkshire; south by Rutlandshire, Northamp-tonshire, and Cambridgeshire; east by the German ocean; and west by Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, and Leicestershire; being 70 miles long, 35 broad, and 160 in cir-cumference, containing 1,740,000 acres, or 2162 square miles, divided into 30 hun-dreds, or wapontakes, having 630 parishes, 256 vicarages, 1556 villages, 243,600 inhabitants, 40,590 houses, one city, Lincoln, and 31 market towns, viz. Stamford, Boston, Grantham, Gainby, Gainborough, Barton, Dunnington, Alford, Binbrooke, Bourne, Burgh, Saltfleet, Louth, Folkingham, Kirton, Burton, Castor, Crowland, Deep-ing, Glandford-Bridge, Holbech, Horncastle, Market-Raisin, Sleaford, Spalding, Spilsby, Stanton, Tattershall, Wainfleet, and Crowle. Its remarkable places are Sunk Island, in the Humber, Axholm Isle, inland; Boston and Lynn Deeps, Fosse Dykes, Lincoln Heath, East, West, and Holland Fens, Bourne and Walcot Spaws; with the principal rivers.

L I N C O L N S H I R E.

ivers, Humber, Trent, Witham, Welland, Ancam, Bane, Nen, Dun, and Idle. Its product, &c. is corn, pastures, large oxen, fine sheep, excellent wool, hemp, horses, ducks, geese, all sorts of wild fowl, with fish, and delicate birds. The air in the south and east parts is thick and foggy, yet wholesome; the soil in the north and west parts is abundantly fertile, but the south and east parts barren and swampy, yet produce great plenty of wild fowl and fish. It sends 12 Members to Parliament, pays 19 parts of the land-tax, and provides 1200 men to the national militia.

THE Roman, Danish, or Saxon encampments in this county are Hibberston, near Kirton, at Winberton cliff, at Alkborough, called Countess's Close, at Yarburgh, near Horncastle, upon Castle-hill, near Gainsborough, and one near Grantham, called Julius Cæsar's Double Trench, at Bourne, near Sleaford, at Castor, at Brough-hill, six miles N. of Castor, and at Ancaster. As to the Roman military ways in this county, authors have pretty well agreed, but not so of the stations. Lincoln is the only one that all have allowed to have been a station, which stands in the center of many Roman roads. Northward is a straight one, leading by Spital-on-the-Street to the Humber. North-east is the Fosse, pointing to Louth and Saltfleet; by a deflection from which, at the intersection, you go northward to Brough (Caulenna.) To the south-east is another, which goes to Horncastle and Tattershall. There was probably a vicinal way from Sleaford to Lincoln, for those that came from Briggend Causeway. Another road goes from Lincoln, full south to Ancaster and Grantham. The Fosse from Lincoln leads south-west to Newark; and another, bearing north-west, passes the Trent into Nottinghamshire, which has the honour of being a vicinal one; all which shew the Romans to have paid a great attention to this county. One enters this county at Stamford, and passes through Ancaster (Segalocum) and Grantham to Lincoln (Lindum). A second crosses the Welland at Lolham Briggs, then to Bourne and Sleaford, leaving Folkingham on the left. From Caister the Roman Agger is in a line to Barton upon the Humber.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

Ancaster Walls and Vaults	Moore Tower near Horncastle
Barling's Abbey E. of Lincoln	Newport Gate at Lincoln
Bishop's Palace, Lincoln	Newsham Abbey near Grimsley
Boston Church	Newstead Monastery near Stamford
Bourne Abbey and Castle	Ormsby Nunnery near Lowth
Castle, and Bead House or Hospital at Stamford	Rivelsby Abbey near Bollingbroke
Caister Castle	Serivelsby Hall near Horncastle
Cotham Abbey near Grimsley	Sempringham Monastery
Crowle Church	Sleaford Castle
Croyland Bridge and Abbey	Somerton Castle
Grantham Church	Stamford College, Castle, &c.
Hill Abbey near Market Rasen	Stickwold Abbey
Horncastle Church	Swineshead Monastery
John of Ghent's Palace at Lincoln	Tattershall Castle, Church, &c.
Irford Abbey near Market Rasen	Tempel Bruer on Lincoln Heath
Kirkstead Abbey	Thornham Abbey
St. Leonard's Church near Boston	Thornton College near Barton
Lincoln Cathedral, Palace and Castle	Thirwell Nunnery near Lincoln
Louth Park and Church	Torksey Hall near Gainsborough
	Tupholm Priory near Lincoln

Newport Gate, Lincoln.

Pub. 18. Oct. 1844. by S. Haaper.

Pub. by S. H. Hagerman & Co. N.Y.

Bishop's Palace Lincoln

Sparrow J.

At present, the moldings of the impost, mentioned by Dr. Stukeley, are not distinguishable. On the north-side of this gate is another arch, but evidently of more modern construction. A little to the west is an Isolé wall, called the mint wall, said likewise to be Roman: it is sixty-three feet long, about thirty high, and three and a quarter thick, with five layers of Roman brick between the stones. Dr. Stukeley likewise speaks of a south Roman gate pulled down by Mr. Houghton fifteen years before the writing of his Itinerary, viz. about the year 1709.—This view, which shews the inside or south aspect of the gate, was drawn anno 1773.

BISHOP'S PALACE.

THIS palace, according to some writers, was begun by Remigius, the first bishop and founder of the cathedral, but demolished in the wars during the reign of King Stephen. It was rebuilt by Robert de Chisney, or Chisneto, called also de Querceto, the fourth bishop, who was consecrated in September 1147, and died January 8, 1167; his great expences in this building, as well as the purchase of a house for the residence of himself and successors in London, occasioned his leaving the see indebted to one Aaron, a Jew, the sum of 300*l*. St. Hugh, the Burgundian, the seventh bishop of this see, consecrated anno 1186, began a great and magnificent hall, which was finished by Hugh de Wells, the ninth bishop, who died anno 1234. The great tower and gate was built by Thomas de Bec, the seventeenth bishop, anno 1341, whose arms are placed thereon. The kitchen had seven chimnies in it. This palace stood south of the Roman wall, upon the brow of the hill, and was a very elegant building, ornamented with many fine bow windows. It commanded a most extensive prospect over the lower city into Nottinghamshire. The ruinous state of this edifice is in a great measure owing to the fury of the civil wars under the Kings Charles I. and II.—This view was drawn anno 1774.

L O N D O N.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL. (PLATE I.)

THE order of Franciscans, friars minors, or grey friars, came out of Italy into England in 1224 ; and about the same time obtained a settlement in London. Their number increasing, John Ewin, citizen and mercer, purchased a piece of ground near Newgate Street, erected on it a house for their residence, and, appropriating it to the commonalty of London, became himself a lay brother of the order. Divers other citizens concurring in the same design, a chapel, chapter-house, dorters, refectory, and other necessary buildings, were soon after added.

IN 1306, Queen Margaret, second wife to Edward I. began the choir of a new conventual church, giving for that purpose, in her life-time, two thousand marks, and one hundred marks by her will. Excited by this example, John earl of Richmond, Isabel, mother to Edward III. and Philippa his queen, with many of the nobility, having liberally contributed in money, jewels, and ornaments, the church, which had been consecrated in 1325, was completed in 1337. It was a grand magnificent edifice, three hundred feet long, in breadth eighty-nine feet, and in height from the ground to the roof, sixty-four feet two inches. Here were buried Queen Margaret the foundress ; Isabel, wife to Edward II. Joane, queen of Scots, wife to David Bruce ; several of the blood-royal, of the principal nobility, and a multitude of persons of the first rank and quality in the kingdom. They are particularly enumerated in Stowe's Survey.

AFTER the suppression of the monasteries, coming into the hands of the Crown, in 1538, 30 Henry VIII. it was made a store-house

MIDDLESEX

IS an inland county, near the centre of the principal part of the kingdom, originally inhabited by the Trinobantes, who made great resistance against the inroads of the Romans. During the Roman government it was included in their third division of Flavia Cæsariensis, which reached from the Thames to the Humber, and is a circumstantial proof that London, (which was always considered in this principality) could not have been situated on the south side of the Thames. During the Saxon Heptarchy it belonged to the kingdom of East Saxons, which began in 527, and ended 827, having had 15 kings. It is bounded on the north by Hertfordshire; south by the Thames, which divides it from Surry; east by Essex; and west by Buckinghamshire; it is in the principality of Canterbury, diocese of London; and holds courts of session for its own jurisdiction; and notwithstanding it is one of the smallest counties in the kingdom for extent, yet, on account of London, &c. it pays more taxes to government than any 10 counties besides. It contains 240,000 square acres, or 298 square miles, is 20 miles long, 14 broad, and 80 in circumference, 1,818,000 inhabitants, and 142,000 houses, is divided into 7 hundreds, and 2 liberties, has 200 parishes, besides those in London, 41 vicarages, 2 cities, viz. London and Westminster, the former the metropolis; to enumerate whose particulars would fill a volume; the other the residence of the king and his court, court, the courts of justice, &c. &c. 7 market towns, viz. Uxbridge, Brentford, the county town, Barnet, Staines, Edgworth, Enfield, and Hounslow; besides a considerable number of villages, larger than many market towns. It sends but eight members to parliament, yet pays 80 parts of the land-tax, and provides 1600 men to the national militia, besides the Trainbands and Artillery Company of the city of London. Its principal rivers are the Thames (whose tide runs above 70 miles from its mouth, and so extensive a trade carried on by it, that in some years, there have arrived 10,000 British and foreign ships); the Lea, Coln, Brent, and the New River, with whose water the greater part of the city is constantly supplied. The number of remarkable buildings both public and private are too great to be enumerated within our limits, the king having three palaces, and the nobility an immense number of houses equal to palaces. The principal natural product of the county is the best of all garden-stuff and eatables of all sorts; but the productions of artists, and manufactures, exceeds comprehension. There are mineral waters at Hampstead, Islington, Northall, Barnet, Kilburne, Bagnigge and Acton.

M I D D L E S E X.

The most considerable Roman encampment, is that vulgarly called Jack Straw's Castle, between Highbury Place and Islington, supposed to have been occupied by Suetonius in opposition to Boadicea, when she burnt London. There is one at Edmonton near Bush-hill, another near Shepperton, ditto near Staines, ditto at King's Arbour near Staines; and a British encampment near Uxbridge.

That Middlesex was antiently all woody and forest is allowed by all, its outlines being in many parts such at this day. The road through Highgate is of modern erection, the old way from St. Alban's to London, after the Watling-street grew impassible and deserted, was by Colney-Hatch to Hornsey church, which soon after fell into the Erming-street from Hertford to London. Where Westminster now is, was antiently a woody island. St. Giles's fields was a wood in the days of Henry V. when Wickliff's followers assembled there. From the centre of the city in Canon street, viz. London-Stone, all the Roman roads took their rout to the extremity of the kingdom in every direction.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

In London, are St. Bartholomew's churches near Smithfield, Bridewell and Castle Baynard, Christ's Hospital, Charter-House, St. John's Gate, Sion College, London-Stone, London-Wall, Tower, St. Catharine's Church, King John's Palace near Holywell Mount, Great St. Helen's Church, Austin Friars Church, Temple Church and Hall, Roll's Chapel, Lincoln's Inn Chapel, Grocers Hall, Temple Bar, &c. &c.	In Westminster are, The Abbey, Cloisters, Hall, House of Commons and Peers, St. Margaret's Church, Westminster School, Treasury, Courts of Justice, Whitehall, the Savoy, Chelsea College and Church, &c. Waltham Cross near Edmonton Tottenham Cross Hanworth Church Hampton Court Palace Sion House near Brentford Canonbury House near Islington Pancras Church Kensington Palace Holland House.
---	--

Pub. in Oct. 1784, by J. Hooper.

Christ's Hospital, London. Pl. 1.

house for prize goods taken from the French ; but in the 38th of the same reign, the whole convent, with all the buildings belonging to it, was given to the mayor and commonalty of London, the church was made parochial, the two neighbouring parishes of St. Nicholas and St. Ewin, with so much of St. Sepulchre's parish as lay within Newgate, being laid together, and the whole was called Christ Church, founded by King Henry VIII. In 1552, the convent was repaired for the reception of fatherless children, who, to the number of almost four hundred, were admitted the same year.

THE print we have here given, is a view of the north cloister, looking into Town Ditch, which being much defaced, was about four years ago, covered with brick. This was the library of the old convent, founded in 1429, by Richard Whittington. Leland, who is copied by Stowe, tells us in his Collectanea, it was one hundred and twenty-nine feet long, and in breadth thirty-one feet, intirely cieled with wainscot, with twenty-eight wainscot desks, and eight double settles. On the south side of this cloister, which is in tolerable preservation, is an escutcheon of the arms of Whittington in two places. Three years after this library was finished, it was furnished with books, at the expence of 556l. 10s. of which 400l. were given by the founder, and the remainder by Dr. Thomas Winchelsey, a brother of the house. Beside this sum, one hundred marks, as it seemeth, were given particularly for transcribing the works of Nicholas de Lyra, in two volumes, which were fastened with chains. This was a very noble benefaction in that age, a mark of great public spirit in Whittington, and demonstrating withal, that the friars and religious houses were not such enemies to learning as they are represented to have been. In truth, the learning of those times, of whatever kind it might be, was principally preserved, and to be found in the monasteries. It nowhere appears into whose possession the books of this library passed on the surrendry of the convent. It is possible they met with the same fate which befel another library, founded by the executors of Whittington, in the college at Guildhall.

The

The books of that library, in the reign of Edward VI. were sent for by Edward duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, with a promise of being shortly returned. They were taken away in three carts, but were never brought back again.

(P L A T E II.)

ABOUT the year 1673, Sir Robert Clayton, Knt. alderman of London, projected a design of founding a free school for instructing the children of poorer citizens in mathematical learning, and fitting them for sea service. On communicating his intention to some particular friends, it was thought that an institution of that kind would be a valuable addition to Christ's Hospital, and the plan of education pursued in that house. Having occasion soon after to wait on the Lord Treasurer Clifford, he acquainted him with his purpose, who readily engaged to lay it before King Charles II. On his representation of the matter *, they obtained of his majesty, for seven years successively, 500l. arrears of interest due on 7000l. charged on some Crown lands, which before the restoration had been left to the hospital. With this sum the governors undertook to erect a school; and afterwards the king, out of his royal bounty, at the instance, as is supposed, of Samuel Pepys, Esq. secretary to the admiralty, directed a sum to be paid annually out of the Exchequer for placing every year ten boys, educated in the said school, apprentices to masters of ships. The buildings are kept in repair, the boys, forty in number, maintained and cloathed, and the master's salary paid out of the revenues of the hospital. Sir Christopher Wren was the architect, under whose direction the hall and cloisters, with other parts of the hospital, which had been damaged by the fire in 1666, were repaired and improved.

* SEE the addition to Stowe's Survey by Strype, who had the particulars from Sir Robert Clayton himself.

Pub. Oct. 22, 1841, by S. Hooper.

Christ's Hospital, London. Pl. 2.

Record, Sept.

R. Godfrey Sc.

Ely House, London. Pl. 1.

Engraved by J. H. P. for J. H. P.

E L Y H O U S E.

ELY Houſe, or, as it was formerly called, Ely's Inn, is the city manſion of the biſhops of Ely. Biſhop de Kirkeby, who died in the year 1290, bequeathed to his ſucceſſors a meſſuage and nine cottages, ſituate in Holborn; which meſſuage became thenceforth the capital manſion of the biſhops of Ely. William de Luda, his immediate ſucceſſor, purchaſed ſeveral other houſes and ſome lands adjoining; and at his death, which happened in the year 1298, left them to the biſhops of that ſee, on condition that the perſon ſucceeding him, ſhould, within three months after his confirmation, pay to his executor one thouſand marks; he alſo gave by his will two hundred marks, to purchaſe twenty marks a-year, for the maintenance of three chaplains, to pray for his ſoul, and the ſouls of the future biſhops of Ely, for ever, in their chapel of this houſe; he likewiſe left three houſes for their habitation.

FROM the following paſſage in Stowe's Annals, it ſeems that the gardens here were well cultivated, as early as the reign of Richard III. when they were famous for producing fine ſtrawberries. He ſays, treating of that king, "and after a little talking to them, he ſaid to the biſhop of Ely, my lord, you have very good ſtrawberries at your garden in Holbourne, I require you to let me have a meſſe of them: gladly, my lord, quoth he, would to God I had ſome better thing as ready to your pleaſure as that; and therewith, he ſent in all haſte his ſervant for a meſſe of ſtrawberries." This circumſtance has been minutely copied by Shakeſpear in his play of Richard III. where he puts the following words into his mouth.

"My lord of Ely, when I was laſt in Holbourne,
I ſaw good ſtrawberries in your grace's garden there.
I do beſeech you ſend for ſome of them."

THIS estate was afterwards greatly increased by different purchases; so much, that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the whole, consisting of buildings, gardens, pastures and enclosures, contained above twenty (Maitland says, forty) acres of land, enclosed within a wall.

BISHOP RICHARD COX, at the pressing instances of Queen Elizabeth, leased the western part of the house, and all the great garden and closes thereunto belonging, at a very small rent, to Christopher Hatton, Esq. afterwards high chancellor, and Lord Hatton, for the term of twenty-one years.

HATTON being in possession, laid out a considerable sum of money in planting, building, and other improvements; and made this a pretence for moving the queen to oblige the bishop to alienate it to him: this she requested, both by speech and in a very pressing letter. Cox in an elegant Latin epistle, humbly suggested his refusal; concluding, that to a perpetual alienation of that his house, his fearful conscience could never yield. Notwithstanding this, he was at last, in a manner, forced to mortgage to the queen, for 1800*l.* that part included in the lease, which was by her conveyed to Hatton.

THIS money Bishop Andrews was resolved to repay, but was prevented by his removal to Winchester. Bishop Wren afterwards tendered the money, commenced a suit, and obtained a sentence in the Court of Requests; but the long parliament put a stop to the proceedings, and imprisoned the bishop. During his imprisonment the greatest part of the house was pulled down, and the garden built into tenements, to the value of several thousand pounds a-year; and Ely House was reduced to a very dark and incommodious habitation, without any remains of its ancient splendor and magnificence, except the chapel and ancient hall; Hatton Garden, Kirby, Great and Little Charles and Cross Streets, together with Hatton Wall, all standing on ground formerly belonging to this house.

AFTER the Revolution, a suit was instituted in Chancery, against the Lord Hatton, who availed himself of his privilege in parliament, parliament, to avoid answering the bill. By this and other incidental delays, the suit was protracted till the time of Bishop Patrick, who thought fit to put an end to it, between the years 1691 and 1707, by accepting a hundred pounds a-year to be settled on his fee.

PART of this story is differently told by Maitland, who says, on Bishop Cox's refusal, the affair was deferred till his death; when the temporalities devolving to the Crown, Elizabeth granted the said apartments and garden to Lord Hatton and his heirs for ever.

THIS house stands on the north side of Holborn, almost opposite to St. Andrew's Church; the entrance is through a large gateway or porter's lodge, into a small paved court. On the right hand are some offices supported by a colonade; and on the left a small garden, separated from the court by a brick wall. In the front appears the venerable old hall, originally built with stone: its roof is covered with lead. Adjoining to the west end, are the chief lodging rooms and other apartments.

THE inside of this hall is about thirty feet high, thirty-two broad, and seventy-two long. The timber of the roof forms a semi dodecagon. It is lighted by six Gothic windows; four on the south, and two on the north side. The floor is paved with tiles. At the lower end is an oaken screen; and near the upper end there is an ascent of one step, for the high table, according to the old English fashion.

To the north-west of the hall, is a quadrangular cloister; its south side measuring ninety-five, and its west seventy-three feet. In the center is a small garden. The east side is at present shut up, and has been converted into a kind of lumber room, or cellar. Over these cloisters are lodging rooms and galleries, where are several ancient windows; but not above two small pieces of painted glass, and those neither beautiful nor curious.

ADJOINING to the north side of the cloister, in a field, containing about an acre of ground, stands the chapel. This field is planted with trees, and surrounded by a wall. On the east side, next

next the hall, are the kitchens. Here were several other offices, which have been taken down within the memory of persons now living.

THE exact time when the chapel was built is not known; it is dedicated to St. Etheldreda, and is a right angled parallelogram, in length ninety-one, and breadth thirty-nine feet; having at each angle an octagonal buttress or turret, crowned with a conical cap or pinnacle. The east window is large and handsome: on each side of it, as well as of those on the north front, are niches with pedestals for statues. The ornaments seem to have been carefully finished; but the whole building is at present greatly defaced by time and the weather; the inside is still very neat, and seems to have been lately repaired.

THE floor is about ten or twelve feet above the level of the ground, and is supported by eight strong chefnut posts, running from east to west, under the center of the building. This forms a souterrain or crypt the size of the chapel, having six windows on the north, answering to as many niches on the south side. At present several of the windows are stopped up. The entrance into this place is through a small Gothic arch under the east window. It does not appear that there ever were any burials in or under the chapel.

THIS view shews the north side of the great hall, over which appears St. Andrew's Church; the back of the east, and part of the north side of the cloisters, as also the east end and north side of the chapel.—It was drawn the 27th of April, 1772.

Dent Sculp

Published 46. Oct. 1784. by S Hooper.

Ely House, London. Pl. 2.

(PLATE II.)

THIS view shews the court-yard, the colonade, and south side of the old hall, with the great door, or chief entrance, over which is carved the arms of the see of Ely.

HERE, according to Stowe, died, February 3, anno 1399, John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster.

IN the reign of King Henry VIII. anno 1531, (at this house, and probably in the hall) eleven gentlemen of the law gave a most splendid entertainment, on being promoted to the dignity of the coif. It lasted five days. There were present the king and queen, foreign ministers, lord mayor, judges, master of the rolls, aldermen of the city, masters in chancery, serjeants at law, principal merchants of London, together with many knights and squires, and a certain number of citizens, belonging to the chief companies of the city. Part of the bill of fare, and the prices of the provisions, are preserved, and printed at large in Maitland's History of London; whereby it appears, that, at that time, the carcase of a large ox was bought for 24s. a hog at 3s. 8d. a calf for 2s. 8d. pigs at 6d. a-piece: fowls at 2d. each; and pigeons for 10d. the dozen. All these articles, considering the occasion and the quality of the persons entertained, were undoubtedly the best of their kind.

IN the year 1633, the committee sat here, for the management of the grand masque, given by the gentlemen of the four Inns of Court to King Charles I. and his queen, on the return of that prince from his progress into Scotland; and from hence, on Candlemas Day, in the evening, the maskers, musicians, and all others concerned, set out, through Chancery Lane, to Whitehall. The particulars of this masque are mentioned in the description of London and its environs. It is said to have cost 21,000*l.* and to have exceeded every thing of that kind ever seen in England. The queen was so pleased with the sight, that it was soon after repeated.

DURING the civil war, this house was converted into an hospital, as appears by an entry in Rushworth, vol. II. part iv. page 1097. "The lords concurred with the commons, in a message sent up to their lordships, for Ely House in Holbourne to be for the use of the sick and maimed soldiers."

THE buildings of this house have undergone many alterations, repairs, and additions ; as appears both by the different styles of architecture, and the various materials with which they are patched. By whom these were done is no where mentioned, except in the Life of Bishop Launcelot Andrews (in Bentham's History of Ely) where it is said, that bishop laid out 2000*l.* in the repair of Ely House, Holborn, Ely Palace, Downham Hall, and Wisbeach Castle. This was between the years 1609 and 1619.

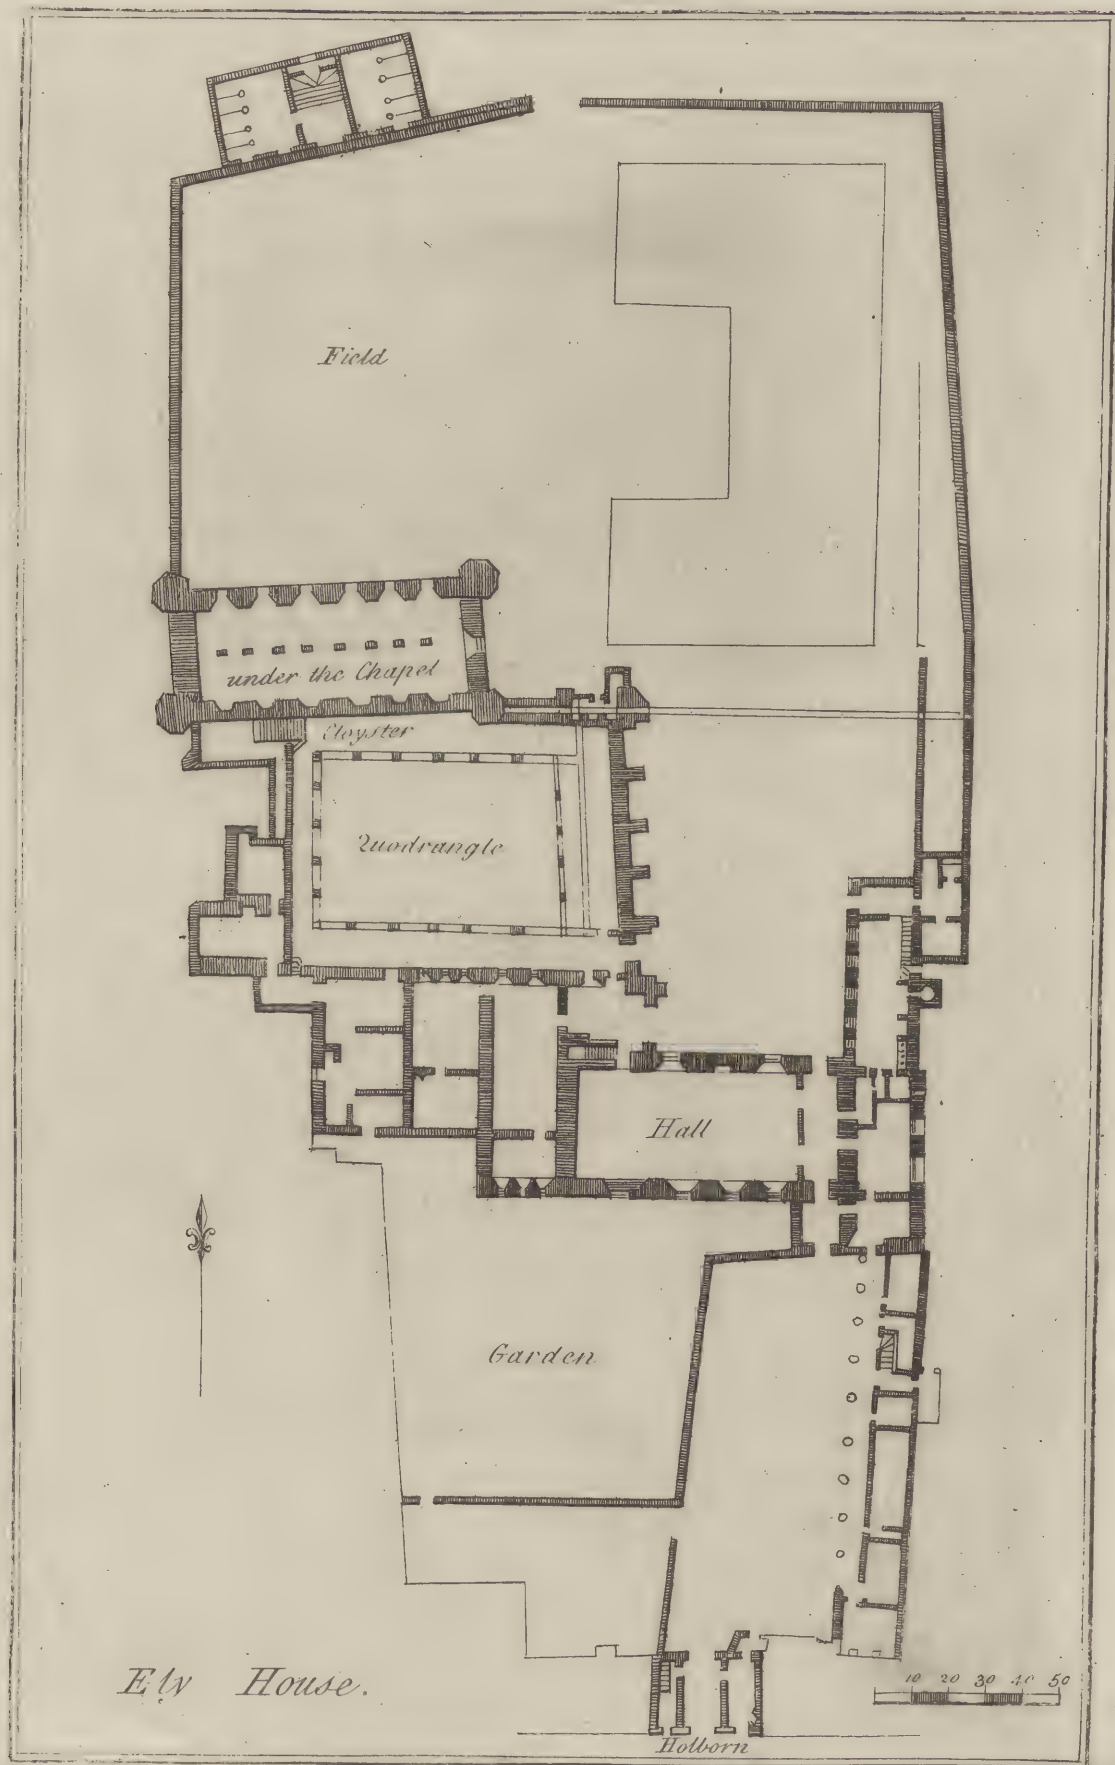

AT length this house, after remaining in the fee of Ely near four hundred and eighty-six years (during which time there were forty-one bishops, six of whom died therein) being much decayed by time, and on a survey deemed incapable of farther repair, and the lords of the treasury judging it a proper place for the erection of several public offices, an act of parliament was procured, enabling the bishop to dispose of it, under the following conditions. This act received the royal assent in June, 1772.

THE house, together with all its appurtenances, to be conveyed and annexed to the imperial Crown of this kingdom, reserving the right of Anthony, earl of Shaftsbury, to the ancient walls and fences, circumscribing the tenements held by him by lease from the late bishop.

SIX thousand five hundred pounds, by way of compensation, to be paid into the bank, in the names of the following trustees, or the survivors or survivor of them : namely, Edmund, lord bishop of Ely ; Owen Salisbury Brereton, and Thomas Hunt, Esquires. Also a clear annuity of 200*l.* to be settled on the bishop and his successors for ever ; payable half yearly, by the receivers-general of the offices to be erected on the premises ; and in the mean time by the receiver-general of the duty upon salt.

OUT

Ely House.

Printed by S. Hooper.

OUT of the fix thousand five hundred pounds, five thousand fix hundred to be applied to the purchase of Clarendon, or Albemarle House, in Dover Street, Piccadilly ; with divers other messuages and gardens, to be settled on the see of Ely, subject to a reserved rent of 18l. per annum.

THE remainder, as also 3000l. due from the representatives of the late bishop, for dilapidations, to be paid into the hands of the trustees, for the purpose of erecting a new mansion-house, for the bishops of Ely, on the site of Albemarle House, according to a plan to be approved of by his grace the archbishop of Canterbury, the lord chancellor, and the speaker of the House of Commons. This house to be called Ely House. Here, when finished, the bishop is to exercise his appellate jurisdiction, as visitor of the university of Cambridge ; and hither is transferred the payments of the reserved rents belonging to this see, directed to be paid at Ely House. Whilst the house is building, these affairs to be transacted at any place within the cities of London or Westminster, that the bishop shall appoint.

THIS house to be provided with proper fixtures thereto ; such fixtures to be scheduled, and to accompany and go along with the said house and building, as, and in the nature of, heir looms. The schedule thereof to be enrolled in the Court of Chancery, within six months after the house is finished and rendered fit for habitation.

IF the surplus of the 6,500l. the 3000l. due for dilapidations, and the produce of the materials of the old house, now standing in Dover Street (which is to be pulled down) should be insufficient, or if an opportunity should offer of buying in the reserved rent, at a reasonable price, the lords of the treasury, on the application of the trustees, producing the bishop's consent in writing, are to issue such sums as shall be wanting ; the money so issued to go towards the redemption of the annuity, or part thereof, at the rate of thirty years purchase : any overplus remaining unemployed, to be vested in the public funds, for the use of the bishop and his successors.

AFTER

AFTER the purchase, the design of building public offices was laid aside, and a handsome street erected on the site of the house. The chapel is still standing, and used for divine service.—This drawing was made April 27, 1772.

THE WHITE TOWER, OR TOWER OF LONDON.

THE following particulars respecting this fortress are in substance related by Maitland, in his History of London, from the authorities of Mat. Paris, Roger Windover, John Bever, Stowe, and other ancient writers.

THIS tower was erected anno 1079, by William the Conqueror, as a keep to a fortress begun by him in the year 1067, to awe the citizens of London; the architect was Gundulph, bishop of Rochester. Fitz Stephens has falsely attributed this edifice to Julius Cæsar.

ANNO 1090 a violent storm of wind did great damage to this building, for the repairs of which, his works at Westminster and London Bridge, William Rufus exacted great sums of money from his people. Notwithstanding these repairs were not finished till the reign of Henry I. the tower was found to stand in need of further help in the year 1155, when Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, caused it to be again repaired.

IN 1190 Lord Chancellor Longchamp, bishop of Ely, encompassed the premises with a wall and ditch; for the doing which, he deprived the Priory of Holy Trinity, without Aldgate, and the Hospital of St. Catherine's, of a mill and other parts of their property.

IN 1239, several bulwarks were added by Henry III. These were much damaged the next year by an earthquake, but the king caused them to be restored and augmented, with a stone gate, bulwark, &c. on the west side or entrance. This new work, which is recorded to have cost more than 12000 marks, fell down a few years after. The same king caused the garner within the tower to be repaired, and the leaden gutters of the great tower tower to be lengthened from the top, so that they should reach the ground for the conveyance of rain water, and to be made up on the fourth side above the said tower, deep alures of good and strong timber, and well leaded all over, by which people might see even to the foot of the said tower, and if needful, the better ascend and descend. He also caused the chapel of St. John the Evangelist in the said tower, as well as the old walls of the tower itself, to be whitened over, from whence probably this building obtained the name of the White Tower.

White Tower, or Tower of London.

KING EDWARD I. in the 2d year of his reign, directed the finishing the work of the ditch, then new made about the bulwark, called the Lyon Tower, from lyons and other wild beasts kept there. Lyons were first lodged in the tower by Henry I.

KING EDWARD IV. added to the fortifications here, and enclosed within a brick wall that parcel of ground which before was only encroached upon by a mud wall, taken out of Tower Hill, west from the Lyons Tower, now called the bulwark. Anno 1484, masons, bricklayers and other workmen were pressed to expedite the repairs directed to be made here by Richard III.

ANNO 1512, the chapel of the White Tower was burned, and in 1532, Henry VIII. repaired the White Tower and other parts of this fortress, and in the next reign a Frenchman who lodged in the round bulwark, between the west gate and the postern or draw-bridge, called the warders gate, blew up the said bulwark and himself therewith, without any further damage, which bulwark was immediately rebuilt.

IN the reign of Queen Elizabeth diverse encroachments were made here, by erecting tenements over the ditch, &c. these by order of the privy council were pulled down.

GREAT repairs were made here anno 1663, when the ditch was scoured, the wharfing new built with brick and stone, sluices made, letting in, and retaining the Thames water as occasion may require. The walls and windows of the White Tower then much decayed, were mended, two of the turrets wholly taken down and new fanes set up, with the king's arms and imperial crowns over them, the old ones having been defaced by the parliamentary garrison : since which time a variety of repairs have been done at different parts, and diverse new buildings erected, as occasion or conveniency required.

THIS fortress is situated on the east side of the city, part of its western extremity standing within the limits of the ancient city wall ; the area contained within its walls is estimated at twelve acres and five rods. Its circumference on the outside of the ditch three thousand one hundred and fifty-six feet. It is surrounded by a ditch in some places one hundred and twenty feet broad, supplied from the Thames, that washes its south boundaries, within which is a lofty wall.

It is defended by eighteen towers, known by the following names : the White Tower, Bloody Hall, St. Thomas's, Lanthorn, Cradle, Well, Salt, Broad Arrows, Castle, Martins, Bower, Flint, Dwelling, Beauchamp, the Bell, the Middle, and the Lyons Towers. There is a spacious wharf next the river.

ALL the portion of the tower which is environed within the site of the ancient city wall or on the west part thereof, is within the city of London, ward of Tower, and parish of Alhallows Barking ; the rest lying on the east side of the said wall, is within the county of Middlesex. This view, which shews the north-west aspect, was drawn in 1784.

Pub. 12. Jan^y 1785, by S. Hooper.

Jas^s Norton sculp.

THE NEW TEMPLE, LONDON.

THE NEW TEMPLE.

THE origin, rules, and dissolution of the rich and powerful order of knights templers, has been already fully related in the preface to this work, and under the article of the Temple at Stroud in Kent; it will therefore suffice to say, that this mansion was erected by the knights of that order in the reign of Henry II. and in the year 1185, dedicated to God and our blessed lady, by Heraclius, patriarch of the church called the Holy Resurrection, in Jerusalem. It was styled the New Temple in reference to a former principal house of the order, situated in Holbourn and denominated the Temple.

THE New Temple and its offices, contained all that space of ground from White Friars eastward to Effex house without Temple Bar, and a part of that also, as appears by the first grant thereof to Sir William Paget, Knt. secretary of state to King Henry VIII Pat. 2d, Ed. 6. This Temple was again dedicated in 1240, as also about the same time re-edified.

AFTER the condemnation of this order, their dissolution and the confiscation of their estates, Edward II. in the year 1313, gave to Aimer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, the whole place and house called the New Temple, at London, with the ground called Fiquet's Croft, and all the tenements and rents, with the appurtenances, that belonged to the Templers, in the city of London and suburbs thereof; also the land called Fletecroft, part of the possessions of the said New Temple. After Aimer de Valence, it is said, Hugh Spencer usurping these estates, held them during his life, but by his attainder they reverted to the crown; but in the mean time, viz. 1324, by a council held at Vienna, all the lands of the Templers, lest the same should be put to prophane uses, were given to the knights hospitallers, of the order of St. John Baptist, called St. John of Jerusalem; which knights had driven the Turks out of the isle of Rhodes, and gained divers other advantages over them; the premises were therefore granted by King Edward III. to them, who possessed it some time, and in the eighteenth year of that king's reign, were forced to repair the bridge of the said temple.

As these knights had their chief house for England at Clerkenwell, near West Smithfield, they, in the reign of the said King Edward III. granted, for a certain rent of ten pounds by the year, the said temple, with the appurtenances thereunto adjoining, to the students of the common laws of England. In their possession the same has ever since remained, and is now divided into two houses for several students, by the name of the Inns of Court, viz. the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple, who keep two several halls; but they all resort to the said temple church.

IN the round walk, the spot here represented, which is the west part without the choir, there remain monuments of noblemen there buried, to the number of eleven, eight of them are images of armed knights, five lying crosses legged, as crusaders, or persons under a vow to visit the holy land, the other three not crossed; the rest are coped stones, all of grey marble. The first of the crosses legged was William Marshall, the elder Earl of Pembroke, who died 1219; the second, William, his son, who died 1231; the third, Gilbert Marshall, his brother, also Earl of Pembroke, slain in a tournament at Hertford, near Ware, twenty miles from London, in the year 1241. After this, Robert Rose, otherwise called Fursan, who as Maitland has it, being made a templer in the year 1245, died and was buried there. These cross legged figures are commonly, though falsely, stiled knights templers, although scarce one of them ever belonged to that order, as the Rev. Doctor Nash has very sufficiently proved in his history of Worcester. "It is an opinion, says he, which universally prevails with regard to these cross legged monu-

monuments, that they were all erected to the memory of knights templers; now to me it is very evident, that not one of them belonged to that order, but as Mr. Habingdon, in describing those at Alvechurch, hath justly expressed it, to knights of the holy voyage; for the order of knights templers followed the rule of the canons regular of St. Austin, and as such were under a vow of celibacy. Now there is scarce one of these monuments which is certainly known for whom it was erected, but it is as certain that the person it represents was a married man. The knights templers always wore a white habit, with a red cross on the left shoulder; I believe not a single instance can be produced of either the mantle or cross being carved on any of these monuments, which surely would not have been omitted, as by it they were distinguished from all other orders, had these been really designed to represent knights templers. Lastly, this order was not confined to England only, but dispersed itself all over Europe, yet it will be very difficult to find one cross legged monument any where out of England; whereas no doubt they would have abounded in France, Italy, and elsewhere, had it been a fashion peculiar to that famous order. But though for these reasons I cannot allow the cross legged monuments to have been erected for knights templers, yet they have some relation to them; being memorials of those zealous devotees, who had either been in Palestine, personally engaged in what is called the holy war, or had laid themselves under a vow to go thither, though perhaps they were prevented from it by death; some few indeed might possibly be erected to the memory of persons who had made pilgrimages thither, merely out of devotion; among the latter probably was the lady of the family of Mepham, of Mepham in Yorkshire, to whose memory a cross legged monument was placed in a chapel adjoining to the once collegiate church of Howden, in Yorkshire, and is at this day remaining, together with that of her husband, on the same tomb. As this religious religious madness lasted no longer than the reign of our Henry III. (the tenth and last crusade being published in the year 1268) and the whole order of knights templers was dissolved 7th of Edward II. Military expeditions to the holy land, as well as devout pilgrimages thither, had their period by the year 1312, consequently none of those cross legged monuments are of a later date than the reign of Edward II. or beginning of Edward III. nor of an earlier than that of King Stephen, when these expeditions first took place in this kingdom."

This view was drawn anno 1784.

M I D D L E S E X.

HAMPTON COURT.

HAMPTON Court is delightfully situate on the north bank of the river Thames, about two miles from Kingston in Surry, and a small distance from the village of Hampton. This palace is chiefly of brick, and was built by Cardinal Wolsey, who began it about the year 1514, soon after his promotion to the see of York. Here, it is said, he set up two hundred and eighty silk beds for strangers only; and otherwise so richly furnished it, that it raised much envy; to avoid the effects of which, he, on the 18th of June, 1525, it being then just finished, presented it to King Henry VIII. who, in return, suffered him to live in his palace of Richmond. It was much enlarged by the king, and had then five spacious courts adorned with buildings, though at present there are only three; and was so much the admiration of foreigners, that Grotius says of it in some Latin verses, that if any Briton is ignorant what is wealth, let him repair to Hampton Court, and there, after viewing all the palaces of the earth, he will say, those are the residence of kings; but this of the Gods. Hentzer, who saw it in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, gives the following description of it and its furniture: "The chief area (says he) is paved with square stones; in its center is a fountain that throws up water, covered with a gilt crown, on the top of which is a statue of justice, supported by columns of black and white marble. The chapel of this palace is most splendid; in which the queen's closet is quite transparent, having its windows of crystal. We were led into two chambers called the presence, or chamber of audience, which shone with tapestry of gold and silver, silver, and filk of different colours : under the canopy of state are these words embroidered in pearl, Vivat Henricus Octavus. Here is, besides, a small chapel richly hung with tapestry, where the queen performs her devotions. In her bed chamber the bed was covered with very costly coverlids of filk. At no great distance from this room we were shewn a bed, the tester of which was worked by Ann Bolyn, and presented by her to her husband Henry VIII. All the other rooms, being very numerous, are adorned with tapestry of gold, silver, and velvet ; in some of which were woven history pieces ; in others, Turkish and American dresses ; all extremely natural.

IN the hall are these curiosities : a very clear looking-glass, ornamented with columns and little images of alabaster ; a portrait of Edward VI. brother to Queen Elizabeth ; the true portrait of Lucretia ; a picture of the battle of Pavia ; the history of Christ's passion carved in mother of pearl ; the portrait of Mary Queen of Scots ; the picture of Ferdinand Prince of Spain, and Philip his son ; that of Henry VIII. under which was placed the bible curiously written upon parchment ; an artificial sphere ; and several musical instruments. In the tapestry are represented negroes riding upon elephants : the bed in which Edward VI. is said to have been born, and where his mother Jane Seymour died in child-bed. In one chamber were several excessive rich tapestries, which are hung up when the queen gives audience to foreign ambassadors : there were numbers of cushions ornamented with gold and silver ; many counterpanes and coverlids of beds lined with ermine. In short, all the walls of the palace shine with gold and silver. Here is, besides, a certain cabinet, called Paradise, where, besides that every thing glitters so with silver, gold, and jewels, as to dazzle one's eyes, there is a musical instrument made all of glass, except the strings. Afterwards we were led into the gardens, which are most pleasant."

HERE, anno 1647, King Charles I. was a sort of prisoner at large. After the Scots, to whom he had fled for refuge, had delivered him up to the Parliamentary Commissioners, in consideration

THE entrance into the Palace Yard is through a large pair of brick gates, adorned with the lyon and unicorn, each of them holding a shield, wherein are the arms of Great Britain decorated with trophies of war.

PASSING through the yard, on each side of which are the stables and other out-offices, you come to the first portal, which was built of brick, by Cardinal Wolsey; but having fallen to decay, was taken down and rebuilt within these two years, and pretty much in the ancient form. This portal leads into a large quadrangle, likewise built by Wolsey, which is here represented; and from hence through the great gate to the second quadrangle, where over this gate there is a beautiful astronomical clock, made by the celebrated Tompion, on which are curiously represented the twelve signs of the zodiac, with the rising and setting of the sun, the various phases of the moon, and other ornaments and indices of time. On the left hand of this quadrangle is the great old hall, in which, by command of the late queen, a theatre was erected, wherein it was intended, that two plays should have been acted every week during the time the court continued here; but Mr. Colley Cibber observes, that only seven plays were performed in it, by the comedians from Drury Lane, the summer when it was raised; and one afterwards, for the entertainment of the duke of Lorrain, afterwards emperor of Germany. The top of this hall, with its large Gothic window, appears in this view

VOL. III. O o towards towards the left-hand, and over the other buildings. On the opposite side of this quadrangle is a stone colonade of fourteen columns, and two pilasters of the Ionic order, the columns in couplets, built by Sir Christopher Wren. From this you pass into the third court or quadrangle, in which are the royal apartments, built with brick and stone by King William III. who greatly admired this place, and built most of the modern part of it. In this palace are a great variety of noble apartments, furnished with pictures of the best masters, too numerous to be here inserted.

THE park and gardens, which, with the site of the palace, are about three miles in circumference, though pleasant, have nothing peculiarly striking in them; the gardens in particular, they being laid out in the old taste. This view was drawn anno 1770.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.

acres, is 33 miles long, 22 broad, and 80 in circumference, is divided into 7 hundreds, has 40,000 inhabitants, 127 parishes, seven market towns, viz. Monmouth the county town, Chepstow, Usk, Abergavenny, Newport, Caerleon, and Pontypool; its principal rivers are the Severn, Munow, Wye, Usk, Rimney, Ebwith, Trothy, Avon, Pill, and Kebby. The most noted places are Hatteral-Hills, Peny-Vale-Hill, Valire-Hill, &c. Erles and Wentle Woods, Denny Island, Charlton Rock, and St. Treacle-Chap. Its chief products are pastures, wood, corn, cattle, sheep, goats, salmon, trout, and pit coal. Its chief manufactures are woollen caps and flatted iron. The tide rises higher at Chepstow than in any other part of Europe, swelling 50 or 60 feet perpendicular. It is hilly and woody, but yet fertile and healthful. It sends 3 Members to Parliament, pays 4 parts of the land-tax, and provides 240 men to the national militia.

In this county there are 3 Roman stations, viz. Iscalegum Augustam, now Usk; Gobannium, now Abergavenny and Venta Silurum, now Caerwent. The Roman roads in this County took three directions, one went from Caerwent across the Severn to Bath; another to Gloucester and Dorchester; and another to Abergavenny and Kenchester. Offa's Dike begins at Beachy Ferry, and passes thro' this county to Radnorshire.

ANTIQUITIES in this COUNTY worthy NOTICE.

Abergavenny Castle	Newport Castle
Caldecot Castle near Chepstow	Old Castle near Llanthony-Priory
Caerleon Castle	Ragland Castle
Chepstow Castle and Church	Skinfrith Castle near Monmouth
Caerwent near Chepstow	Stragle Castle and Priory near Newport
Greenfield Castle near Newport	Trednock Church near Caerleon
Grifmond Castle on the Munow	Tyntern Abbey on the Wye
Llannayth Church near Monmouth	Usk Castle
Llanthony Abbey, Priory, and Castle	Welch Bicknor near Monmouth
Monmouth Castle and Church	White Castle near Abergavenny

Ab ergavenny Castle, Monmouthshire, Pl. 1.

Pub. 29 Oct. 1844 by J. Hooper.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.

ABERGAVENNY CASTLE. (PLATE I.)

THIS castle stands on an eminence on the south side of the town, and about an hundred yards north of the river Usk, which hereabouts meets the Gavenni, from whence the place takes its name; Aber in Welch signifying the mouth of a river.

It is at present extremely ruinous, though Leland in his Itinerary calls it "a fair castel;" by which it seems as if it was then standing.

THE chief part remaining appears to have been a kind of gateway, having a demy-tower on the south side of it, with some detached fragments of walls. A little distance to the east of these, near the site of the outer walls, is a small artificial mount. From some arches and windows, which are pointed, the part remaining was built since the reign of Henry II. when, according to Leland's Collectanea, it was taken by the Welch.

CAMDEN gives the following account of it and its owners: "It (i. e. Abergavenny) is fortified with walls and a castle, which (as Giraldus observes) has been oftener stained with the infamy of treachery than any other castle of Wales. First, by William son of Earl Miles, and afterwards by William Breos; both having upon public assurance, and under pretence of friendship, invited thither some of the Welch nobility, and then basely murdered them. But they escaped not the just vengeance of God; for Breos having been deprived of all his effects (his wife and son also starved with hunger) died in exile. The other having his brains dashed out with a stone, while Braulas Castle was on fire, received at length the due reward of his villainy. The first lord of Abergavenny venny that I know of, was one Hamelin Balun, who made Brien Wallingford, or Brent de L'Isle (called also Fitz Count) his heir; and he having built here an hospital for his two sons, who were lepers, left the greatest part of his inheritance to Walter the son of Miles earl of Hereford. This Walter was succeeded by his brother Henry, whom the Welch slew when they invaded his territories; which the king's lieutenants defended, though not without great hazard and danger. By the sister of Henry it descended to the Breoses; and from them in right of marriage, by the Cantelows and Hastings, to Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthen. But William Beauchamp obtained it of Lord Grey by conveyance; and he again, in default of issue-male, entailed it on his brother Thomas, earl of Warwick, and on his heirs-male, Richard, son of William Beauchamp, lord of Abergavenny, who for his military valour was created earl of Worcester; and being slain in the wars of France, left an only daughter, who was married to Edward Nevil. From henceforth the Nevils became eminent under the title of barons of Abergavenny. But the castle was a long time detained from them, by reason of the conveyance before-mentioned.

THE fourth of these dying in our memory, left an only daughter Mary, married to Sir Thomas Fane, Knt. between whom and Sir Edward Nevil, the next heir-male (to whom the castle and most of the estate had been left by will, which was also confirmed by authority of parliament) there was a trial for the title of Abergavenny before the House of Lords, in the second year of King James I. the pleadings on both sides taking up seven days. But in regard the question of right could not be fully justified; and that each of them seemed to all (in respect to descent) very worthy of the title; and that moreover it was evident, that both the title of Baron of Abergavenny, and that of Le Despencer belonged hereditarily to this family; the peers requested of his Majesty, that both might be honoured with the title of Baron; to which he agreed. It was then proposed to the peers by the lord chancellor, first, whether the heir-male or female should enjoy the title of Aber-

Abergavenny; upon which the majority of voices gave it for the heir-male. And when he had again proposed, whether the title of Baron Le Despenfer should be conferred on the female and her heirs, they unanimously agreed to it; to which his Majesty gave the royal assent.

AND Edward Nevil was soon after summoned to parliament, by the king's writ, under the title of Baron of Abergavenny; and being, according to the usual ceremony, introduced in his parliament robes between two barons, he was placed above the Baron de Audeley. At the same time also, the king's letters patents were read before the peers, whereby his Majesty "restored, advanced, preferred, &c. Mary Fane to the estate, degree, title, style, name, honour, and dignity of Baroness Le Despenfer, and that her heirs successively should be Barons Le Despencer, &c." But the question of precedence being proposed, the peers referred the decision thereof to the commissioners for the office of earl marshal of England, who upon mature deliberation, gave it under their hands and seals for the barony of Le Despenfer. This was read before the peers, and by their order registered in their Journal, out of which I have taken this brief account. Edward was succeeded in the honour of baron of Abergavenny by his son and heir of the same name; to whom succeeded Henry his son, and likewise John son of the said Henry; and George (brother and heir to the said John) who was also succeeded by George his son; who dying without issue, the title of Lord Abergavenny descended to George, son of George Nevil of Sheffield, in the county of Suffex, great-grandson to Edward Lord Abergavenny. What ought not to be here omitted is, that John Hastings held this castle by homage, ward and marriage. "When it happens" as we read in the Inquisition, "and there shall chance to be war between the king of England and prince of Wales, he ought to defend the country of Overwent at his own charge, to the utmost of his power, for the good of himself, the king, and kingdom."

THE present proprietor of this castle is the Right Honourable George Nevil, Lord Abergavenny, the fourth baron in succession from him with whom Camden concludes. This view, which shews the inside of the ruins, as seen from the east, was drawn in 1775.

(PLATE II.)

THIS plate presents the outside, or southern aspect of the castle, as it appears when viewed from the river side. The mount, mentioned in the former description, is here shewn.

ACCORDING to Caradoc's History of Wales, anno 1172, this castle was surpris'd by Sitsylht ap Dyfnwal, and Jefan ap Sitsylht ap Riryd, two Welsh commanders, who made the whole garrison prisoners: and the same historian relates, that it was again taken in the reign of King John, about the year 1215, by Lewellyn, Prince of Wales, notwithstanding the anathema of the pope, to whom that king, by his submission, had reconciled himself.

IN the act of Resumption, 3d Henry VII. 1487, in the rolls of parliament, is an exception in favour of John Morton, our serjeant porter, steward of the lordship of Burgavenny, and constable and porter of the castle there.

IN the British Museum, No. 911, Bib. Harl. is a MS. written by one Richard Symonds, who served in the royal army, during the troubles under Charles I. containing among other things, notes, &c. of the state of the castles and garrisons of Monmouthshire, wherein he gives the following particulars respecting this edifice. Sunday, July, 3, 1645, "His Majesty lay at Rupperie, a faire feate of Mr. Morgans com. Monmouth ye castle of Abergavenny, burnt viz. the habitable part, the garrison drawn out and quitted." This view was drawn in 1775.

Pub. by J. S. 1844, for S. Hooper.

Abergavenny Castle, Monmouthshire. Pl. 2.

Chepstow Castle, Monmouthshire.

Pub. by W. H. H. & Co. by S. H. H.

CHEPSTOWE CASTLE, CALLED KASWENT, OR CASTELK GWENT.

THE castle of Chepstowe stands on a high rock, washed by the river Wye, near its influx into the Severn, over which there is a wooden bridge seventy feet high, the tide here rising sometimes sixty feet: this bridge is repaired at the joint expence of the counties of Gloucester and Monmouth.

ITS area or site is said to occupy five acres of ground. It consists of three courts: the second is converted into a kitchen garden. Here are several buildings, particularly the chapel, which was once very large and much ornamented; it was three stories high, as is evident from the marks of the joists and floors, in the uppermost are the remains of a fire place. A room is shewn in a building near the gate, in which Henry Martin, the regicide, was confined for many years, and where he died. Great attention seems to have been bestowed in fortifying the entrance, which lies through two lofty towers on the east side; for besides a strong latticed door, the crossings of which are fastened with iron bolts within, and covered with iron plates, on the outside there was a portcullis, whose groove is still to be seen, and two large round funnels in the top of the arch, for pouring down melted lead or scalding water, and also a machicolated or projecting arch beyond all, and a chink on a small projection on the south side of the gate, at about the height of a man.

THE castle seems to have been built at the same time with the town, to which it was a kind of citadel, but by whom, or when, neither Leland, Camden, nor any of the topographical writers mention. Stowe, indeed, in his Annals, attributes the building of the castle to Julius Cæsar, a supposition too glaringly absurd to merit serious confutation. Probably it was built by some of the earls of Pembroke. Camden thinks it of no great antiquity; “for several affirm, says he, and not without reason, that it had its rise not many ages past from the ancient Venta, which flourished about

about four miles from hence, in the time of Antonius, who calls it Venta Silurum, as if it was their chief city, which neither arms nor time have been able to consume; for at this day it is called Kaer-went, or the city of Venta. But the city itself is so much destroyed by the one or the other, that it only appears to have once been, from the ruinous walls, the chequered pavements, and the Roman coins.

LELAND, in his Itinerary, thus describes it: "The towne of Chepstowe hath been very strongly waulled; as yet doth appere. The waulles began at the ende of the great bridge over Wye, and so came to the castle, the which yet standeth fayr and strong, not far from the ruin of the bridge. In the castle ys one tower, as I herd say, be the name of Longine. The town now hath but one parochie chirche: the cell of a blake monke or two of Bermundsey by London was lately there suppressed; a great part of cumpace withyn the waulles is now converted to little meadowes and gardens."

THIS place formerly belonged to the Clares, earls of Pembroke, who were likewise called earls of Strighul, from a neighbouring castle of that name, wherein they dwelt. The last of these, Richard, surnamed Strong Bow on account of his skill in archery, was the first who gained a footing of the English in Ireland; by his daughter it devolved to the Bigots, and is now by descent the property of the Duke of Beaufort.

IN the troubles under Charles I. this town and castle were garisoned for the king, and, according to Rushworth, in October 6, 1645, Colonel Morgan, governor of Gloucester, at the head of three hundred horse, and four hundred foot, and assisted by the Monmouthshire men, with little difficulty made himself master of the town, and then sent the following summons to Colonel Fitzmorris, an Irishman, governor of the castle.

S I R,

I AM commanded by his excellency Sir Thomas Fairfax to demand this castle for the use of the king and parliament, which

I require

MONMOUTHSHIRE. 153

I require of you, and to lay down your arms, and accept of reasonable propositions, which will be granted both to you and your soldiers, if you observe this summons. And further, you are to consider of what nation and religion you are; for if you refuse this summons, you exclude yourself from mercy, and are to expect for yourself and soldiers, no better than Stinchcombe * Quarter. I expect your sudden answer, and according thereunto shall rest your friend.

Chepstowe, October 6, 1645.

THOMAS MORGAN.

To which Colonel Fitzmorris sent this answer.

S I R,

I HAVE the same reason to keep this castle for my master the king, as you to demand it for General Fairfax, and until my reason be convinced, and my provisions decreased, I shall (notwithstanding my religion and menaces of extirpation) continue in my resolution, and in my fidelity and loyalty to my king. As for Stinchcombe Quarter I know not what you mean by it, nor do depend upon your intelligence for relief, which in any indigence I assure me of, and in that assurance I rest

Your Servant,

ROBERT FITZMORRIS.

WHAT quarter you give me and my soldiers, I refer to the consideration of all soldiers, when I am constrained to seek for any.

NOTWITHSTANDING this resolute answer, four days after he surrendered upon articles, himself and his garrison becoming prisoners of war.

FROM the same authority it appears, that anno 1648, about the beginning of May, this castle was surprized by Sir Nicholas

* STINCHCOMBE was a place where the parliament complained of Prince Rupert for putting their men to the sword.

Kemish, Mr. Thomas Lewis, and other active royalists, who, in the absence of the governor, Colonel Hewes, by means of a correspondence with some in the castle, in the night obtained possession of a port: when, notwithstanding one Cautrell, an officer of the garrison, with some soldiers, retreated to a tower, where they for a while attempted a defence, it was taken, and Captain Herbert, with the garrison, made prisoners.

COLONEL HERBERT having intelligence thereof, presently assembled some forces in order to recover it, and Cromwell marched against it in person, thinking to have taken it by storm; he soon got possession of the town, but unsuccessfully assaulted the castle, whereupon he left Colonel Ewer, with a train of artillery, seven companies of foot, and four troops of horse, to prosecute the siege; when, though the garrison consisted of only one hundred and sixty men, they gallantly defended themselves till their provisions were exhausted, and even then refused to surrender on assurance of quarter, hoping to escape by means of a boat: but in this they were prevented by the intrepidity of a soldier in the parliamentary army, who swimming across the river with a knife in his teeth, cut loose and brought away the boat; at length, on the 25th of May the castle was taken. Sir Nicholas Kemish and about forty men were slain in the siege. This was considered by the parliament of such importance, that the captain who brought the news was rewarded with 50*l.* and the parliament directed, that a letter of thanks should be drawn up, and sent from that house to Colonel Ewer and the officers and soldiers employed on that service.

ANNO 1659, here was a royal garrison on the following establishment.

	£	s.	d.
Governor, besides captains pay - - - -	0	2	0	} per diem
A gunner, at - - - - -	0	1	8
A mattsosse, at - - - - -	0	0	10
Fire and candle for the guard - - - -	0	0	8

A com-

Pub. 28 Oct. 1881, by S. Hooper.

Lantony Monastery, Monmouthshire.

	£	s.	d.
A company of foot consisting of a captain, at	-	0	8
A lieutenant, at	-	0	4
Two serjeants, 1s. 6d. each	-	0	3
Three corporals and one drum, 1s. each	-	0	4
Sixty-two foldiers, at 8d. each	-	2	1
		3	5
		6

This drawing was made anno 1762.

LLANHODENEI, LANTONY, OR LANTONIA PRIMA.

THIS monastery stands in the northermost corner of the county of Monmouth, amongst the Hatterell hills. Its situation is thus described by Giraldus Cambrensis: "In the low vale of Ewias, which is about a bow shot over, and enclosed on all sides with high mountains, stands the church of St. John Baptist, covered with lead; and considering the solitariness of the place not unhandfomely built, with an arched roof of stone, in the same place where formerly stood a small chapel of St. David the archbishop, recommended with no other ornaments than green moss and ivy, a place fit for the exercise of religion, and the most conveniently seated for canonical discipline of any monastery in the island of Britain: built first to the honour of that solitary life by two hermits, in this desert, remote from all the noise of the world, upon the river Hodeni, which glides through the midst of the vale, whence it was called Llan Hodeni, the word Llan signifying a church or religious place. But to speak more accurately, the true name of that place is Nent Hodeni, for the inhabitants call it at this day Llan-dhéwi-yn nent Hodeni, i. e. St. David's Church on the river Hodeni. The rains which mountainous places produce are here very frequent, the winds exceedingly fierce, and the winters almost continually cloudy; yet notwithstanding that gross air, it is so tempered that this place is very little subject to diseases: the monks sitting here in their cloisters, when they chance to look out for fresh air, have a pleasing prospect on all hands, hands, of exceeding high mountains, with plentiful herds of wild deer feeding aloft at the furthest limits of the horizon. The body of the sun surmounts these hills so as to be visible to them, only between the hours of one and three, nor even that but when the air is most clear. And a little after, the form of this place drew hither Roger, bishop of Salisbury, prime minister of state, who having for some time admired the situation and retired solitariness of it, and also the contented condition of the monks, serving God with due reverence, and their most agreeable and brotherly conversation; and being returned to the king, and having spent the best part of the day in the praise of it, he at last thus concluded his discourse; what shall I say more, all the treasure of your majesty and the kingdom would not suffice to build such a cloister; at which both the king and courtiers being astonished, he at length explained that paradox, by telling them he meant the mountains wherewith it was on all hands inclosed."

THE history of this house is given by Tanner in the following words: here, in a very solitary valley, not long after the year 1108, was settled a priory of canons regular, of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, who acknowledged Hugh Lacy for their founder. In the beginning here were above forty religious, but by reason of the hard usage they met with from the rudeness, poverty and barrenness of the neighbouring country and people, the greatest part of them removed; first to the bishop's palace, in Hereford, and after, viz. A. D. 1136, to a place near Gloucester, which was also called, from this mother monastery, Lantony (and sometimes for distinction's sake, Lantony the second), so that only thirteen canons were left here, which number in process of time decreased, and the house was almost ruined. When King Edward IV. (anno 21.) gave leave for the annexing this priory to Lantony, near Gloucester, here being to be maintained a priorative, and four canons; but it is to be doubted whether this union ever took full effect; because the estate of Lantony the first is valued distinct in 26 Henry VIII. at 87l. 9s. 5d. per ann. M. S. Corp. Christ. Col. Cant. 99l. 19s. ob. Dugdale, 71l. 3s. 2d.

Pub. 18. Oct 1784, by S. Hooper.

Mona Gate & Bridge, Monmouthshire.

S. Sparrow

2d. Speed. 1121. 5d. summa inde M. S. Val. The site was granted 38 Henry VIII. to Nic. Arnold."

It is necessary to observe, that in the description here quoted from Giraldus, there is a small mistake respecting the sun, the monks of this house having enjoyed a greater portion of its rays than he has assigned them. The author of the Tour through Wales, as well as a note in Gibson's Camden, bear testimony to this. The former says, that luminary shone upon the ruins at the time he saw it, which was eleven o'clock.

THE abbey church is in the form of a cross, and was, according to Speed, built about the year 1137, and the present ruins seem of a later period, having a mixture of circular and pointed arches; those below being pointed, and those above circular. The whole seems to have been built at the same time, and from one plan.

THE whole nave is still remaining from east to west, the roof excepted. It measures, according to the author before cited, two hundred and twelve feet in length, twenty-seven feet four inches in breadth. The aisles are no more than nine feet six inches broad. The diagonal stone vault, over the body of the church, sprung from small clustered flying pillars; these are still seen projecting from the walls between the Gothic arches of the nave.

Two sides of the high tower are still extant, which rise from nearly the center of the church.

THE whole structure is faced with a durable and well worked stone. This view was drawn anno 1777.

MONNOW GATE AND BRIDGE.

THIS plate presents the south aspect of Monnow Gate and Bridge, so called from the river over which it is constructed. Both are mentioned in Leland's Itinerary, and indeed have undoubted marks of antiquity; but neither history nor tradition afford any lights respecting the date of their erection. As a picturesque object they have long been noticed by the connoisseurs. This view was drawn anno 1775.

NEWPORT CASTLE, OR THE NEW CASTLE
UPON USKE.

THIS castle stands on the westernmost bank of the river Uske, a small distance north of the bridge, and at the east end of the town, which is only two miles from the mouth of the river. Powel says it was also called Trefdeth Castle by the Welch.

It was apparently erected for the defence of the passage over the river, towards which it has three strong towers, but towards the town it has only a common wall, without any flanks or defences. It is in figure a right angled parallelogram, measuring about forty-six yards by thirty-two, the greatest length running from north to south, or in a direction parallel to the course of the river.

It was built with small rubble stones, but coated with square ones. It seems to have been neatly finished, and the windows, many of which are of what is called the Gothic sort, elegantly decorated. At present it is used for a farm-yard.

THIS castle was built before the year 1172; for in Powel's History of Wales, it is said to have been then garrisoned by the earl of Bristol's men, who basely slew Owen ap Caradoc, when he was coming to treat with King Henry, unarmed, and almost unattended, and under the faith of a safe passage promised him by that king. Jorwerth ap Owen ap Caradoc, his father, in revenge for this cruel and treacherous murder, carried fire and sword to the gates of Hereford and Gloucester.

In the 15th of Edward II. this castle belonged to Hugh le Despenser the son, who seems at that time to have resided here. In a petition to the king in parliament, he sets forth, that it, with his castles of Cardiff, Kerseli, Llantrissant, Talnan, Lamplethan, Kenefeg, Neath, Drusselan and Denevor, were plundered and burned by the earl of Hereford, Roger Mortimer, and his nephew of the same name, and diverse other great personages confederated against him, who were at the head of an army of eight hundred Newport Castle, Monmouthshire.

Pub. 22 Oct. 1844, by S. Hooper.

The Roman Tower, at Carleon, Monmouthshire.
Published 15 August 1789, by S. Hooper.

D. L. sculp.

Ragland Castle, Monmouth, Sh.
Pub. no. 1764 by C. Hooper.

hundred men at arms, five hundred hobelers and ten thousand foot men ; this petition with the particulars of the damage done, is recorded in the Rolls of Parliament of the 21st of that king.

It is mentioned by Leland in his Itinerary ; he calls it " a very fair castell, longing sumtyme to the Buckinghames."

RICHARD SYMONDS, an officer of the royal army, anno 1645, says, this castle was then in ruins, and belonged to Philip earl of Pembroke. This view was drawn anno 1775.

ROMAN TOWER AT CAERLEON.

THE building whose ruins are here delineated stands at Caerleon in Monmouthshire, near the bridge laid over the river Uik ; it is generally supposed of Roman construction, there having been a Roman station at this place, and the remains of an amphitheatre, baths, and other Roman works, being still discoverable, about and within the enceinte of its walls, which are said to have been near three miles in compass.

It seems difficult to assign the use for which this tower could have been built ; its size, for which the figures may serve as a scale, shew it could scarcely have been intended for defence, as from its smallness it could contain but very few men ; perhaps it might be intended for a stair-case, or as the towers in Burgh Castle near Yarmouth, the Gariononum of the Romans, for a buttress to prop and strengthen the adjacent wall. This view was drawn anno 1778.

RAGLAND CASTLE.

THIS castle is of no great antiquity, its foundations are said to have been laid about the time of Henry VII. since which additions have been made to it at different periods. Leland thus describes it, " Ragland yn middle Venceland ys a fair and pleasant castel viii miles from Chapstow and vii from Bergevenny. The towne by is bare, ther ly to goodly parkes adjacent to the castel."

And

And in another place, "Morgan tolde me that one of the laste Lord Herbertes buildid al the beste logges of the castel of Ragland." Camden calls it a fair house of the earl of Worcester's, built castle like. In the troubles under Charles I. this house was a garrison for the king, being fortified with many outworks by the earl of Worcester, and was the last garrison held by the royalists. The circumstances of its siege are in substance thus related in Rushworth's Historical Collections.

RAGLAND Castle was invested, or, as it is termed, streightened, first by Sir Trevor Williams and Major General Langhorn, and afterwards by Colonel Morgan, ordered from Worcester to command in chief, the force then only fifteen hundred men, and the garrison consisted of eight hundred; but after the reduction of Oxford, Morgan was reinforced with two thousand men, when he sent a summons; before this reinforcement, the garrison in a fally, had killed a cornet of Morgan's regiment and taken his colours. This summons required the marquis to yield up the castle, with all the ammunition and provision, as the sole condition on which he might expect mercy; that this was the last place held out in the whole kingdom, and Sir Thomas Fairfax had spared his forces for its reduction, having completed his other work: he likewise enclosed a copy of a letter from the king, directing the surrender of all his garrisons, in order to shew that he could have no hopes of relief. This letter was dated, June 28, 1646.

THE marquis in answer, begged leave to doubt the authenticity of the letter, and Ragland not being mentioned, refused to surrender, saying, he made choice, if it so pleased God, rather to die nobly, than to live with infamy. Colonel Morgan then offered to permit him to send an officer to Oxford, to those lords to whom his majesty's letters were directed; but the marquis, without taking notice of the offer, persisted in his refusal. General Fairfax shortly after arrived in person from Bath to hasten the siege, when he repeated the summons; in answer to which the marquis requested leave to ask his majesty's pleasure respecting the garrison, but but as to the castle, it being his own and only house, he presumed the king would command nothing, nor could he perceive how either by law or conscience he could be forced out of it. This request Fairfax by letter refused, saying it had not been allowed to the most considerable garrisons, farther than sending an account to his majesty of the thing done upon the surrender, which he freely granted to his lordship; and as to the distinction of its being his house, had it not been converted into a garrison he should not have been troubled; having sent this answer he considered his conscience discharged respecting the consequences of a farther refusal. The earl then relinquished his request of sending to the king, but said, that having laid out 20,000*l.* in consequence of his majesty's promises, if he offended the king that would he lost without any benefit to the parliament, but that if he might quietly receive his means of subsistence and live in security, he would peaceably quit the garrison; and that if the general knew how intimate he was with his grandfather in the time of Henry, earl of Huntingdon, he would not refuse his request.

DIVERSE other letters passed between them, in which the earl requested a cessation of arms, in order to treat, which Fairfax offered to grant, on August 14th, for the morrow, from nine in the morning till two in the afternoon, but the earl sent him his proposals, which were deemed inadmissible by the general, who in return sent him word he might still have the conditions first offered, provided he returned his resolution by six in the evening.

IN the mean time the approaches were carried on, being not above sixty yards distant, and two bomb batteries erected at different places, one of four, and the other of two twelve-inch mortars. The general ordered another approach, in which the engineer, Captain Hooper, had made a considerable progress: when on 15th August, the earl agreed to treat on the general's propositions, and by Monday 17th, the treaty was concluded as follows: The castle and garrison, with the ordinance, arms, ammunition, and provisions of war, to be delivered to Sir Thomas Fairfax without spoil, on Wednesday the 19th, by ten in the forenoon, the garrison to march out with colours flying, trumpets sounding, drums beating, matches lighted at both ends, and bullets in their mouths; every soldier with twelve rounds of powder, with match and bullets in proportion, and bag and baggage, thence to march to any place within ten miles which the governor should nominate, where the arms were to be delivered up, and the men disbanded, under an engagement not to serve hereafter against the parliament: this was accordingly put in execution at the day assigned. In the castle were delivered up twenty pieces of ordinance, only three barrels of powder, there being a mill with which they could make three barrels per day. There was great store of corn and malt, wine and beer; the few horses they had were almost starved for want of hay, so that they had like to have eaten one another, and were therefore tied with chains. There were also, great store of goods and rich furniture, which General Fairfax committed to the custody of Mr. Herbert, commissioner of the army, Mr. Roger Williams, and Major Taliday. There marched out of the castle, the marquis of Worcester, who was then above four-score years of age, the Lord Charley, the marquis's son, the countess of Glamorgan, the Lady Jones, Sir Phillip Jones, Dr. Bailey, Commissary Gwilliam, four colonels, eighty-two captains, sixteen lieutenants, six cornets, four ensigns, four quarter masters, fifty-two esquires and gentlemen.

THE following account of the present state of this castle is given by Mr. Gilpin, in his ingenious description of the picturesque beauties of the Wye.

RAGLAND Castle seems (as we saw it from the height) in a rich vale, but as we descended it took an elevated station, it is a large and very noble ruin, though more perfect than ruins of this kind commonly are, it contains two areas within the ditch, into each of which you enter by a very large and deep gateway. The buildings, which circumscribe the first area, consist of the kitchen and offices; it is amusing to hear the stories of ancient hospitality, "here are the remains of an oven," said our conductor, "which was Tintern Abbey, Monmouthshire.

Pub. & Del. by S. Hooper.

was large enough to bake a whole ox, and a fire range wide enough to roast him."

THE grand hall, or banquetting room, a large and lofty apartment, forms the screen between the two areas, and is perfect except the roof. The music gallery may be distinctly traced, and the butteries which divide the hall from a parlour: near the hall is shewn a narrow chapel.

ON viewing the comparative size of the halls and chapels in old castles, one can hardly at first avoid observing that the founders of these ancient structures supposed a much greater number of people would meet together to feast than to pray. And yet we may perhaps account for the thing, without calling in question the piety of our ancestors. The hall was meant to regale a whole county, while the chapel was intended only for the private use of the inhabitants of the castle. The whole area of the first inclosure is vaulted, and contains cellars, dungeons, and other subterraneous apartments. The buildings of the second area are confined merely to chambers.

NEAR the castle stands the citadel, a large octagonal tower, two or three sides of which are still remaining. This tower is encircled by a separate moat, and was formerly joined to the castle by a draw-bridge. This view was drawn anno 1775.

TINTERN ABBEY. (PLATE I.)

THIS was a Cistercian abbey, founded A. D. 1131, by Walter de Clare, and dedicated to St. Mary. This Walter was grandson of William the son of Osbert, to whom William the Conqueror had given the manors of Wollleston and Tudenham, and all he could conquer from the Welch. Walter dying without issue was succeeded by his brother Gilbert Strongbowe, earl of Pembroke, whose grandson Robert Strongbowe was the conqueror of Leinster in Ireland. The male line of these Strongbowes failing, Maud, the eldest of their female heirs, was married to Hugh Bigod, earl of Norfolk and Suffolk.

WILLIAM

WILLIAM, lord marshal of England, and earl of Pembroke, in the seventh year of the reign of King Henry III. confirmed to the monks here all the lands, possessions, liberties, and immunities formerly granted by his predecessors; the particulars of which are to be seen in the Monasticon. Robert Bigod, earl of Norfolk, anno 1301, also confirmed to them divers lands at Portcassick, Pentirk, Modisgat, &c. His charter is likewise printed in the Monasticon.

ABOUT the time of the dissolution, here were thirteen religious, when the estates were, according to Dugdale, estimated at 192l. 1s. 4d. ob. per annum. Speed says, the value was 256l. 11s. 6d. The site was granted the 28th of Henry VIII. to Henry earl of Worcester, and is now the property of his grace the duke of Beauford. In 1553 here remained in charge 3l. 6s. 8d. in annuities and corrodies.

WILLIAM of Worcester in his Itinerary gives the following obituary of the founders of this monastery and their kindred, taken, as he says, from an ancient calendar. He also gives the annexed measures and description of the church, part of which is printed in Browne Willis's History of Abbies, where by mistake he has translated the word virga, rod, instead of yard.

Earl Gilbert died	- - -	6th January.
Earl Robert	- - -	8th February.
Isabella countess of Pembroke	- -	9th March.
Richard I. King of England	- -	27th March.
Matilda countess Warren	- - -	27th March.
Walter, founder of the church of St. Mary of Tynterne	- - -	} 10th March.
Richard earl mareschal	- - -
Earl Richard	- - -	15th April.
		20th April.
The Countess Sibilla, mother of William earl of Pembroke	- - -	} 3d June.
Galfredus Mareschal earl of Pembroke
Margaret countess of Blaisois	- -	27th June.
		12th July.

Ralph

Ralph Bloeth, junior	- - - - -	13th July.
Joen, King of France	- - - - -	14th July.
Louis, King of France	- - - - -	6th November.
Elizabeth Countefs V.	- - - - -	19th November.
Blanch, Queen of France	- - - - -	28th November.
Margaret, countefs of Flanders	- - - - -	4th December.
Berenger and the countefs his fifter	- - - - -	23d December.
Anfelmas Marefchal	- - - - -	24th December.
Matilda de Clare, countefs of Gloucefter and Hereford	- - - - - - - - - -	19th December.

ROGER BYGOD, earl marefchal, who built the church of Tyn-tern, died the 7th day of December, on the letter E. as in the calender of the religious of Tynterne.

THOMAS de BROTHERTON, marefchal of England, died 24th Auguft.

MEMORANDUM, that in the 30th of Edward I. of England, that is in the year of Chrift—, Roger Bygot, earl of Norfolk, gave to the church of Tyntern the lordfhip of Eccle and the church of St. Edward of Halbergate with all its appurtenances.

The length of the church of St. Mary of Tynterne contains feventy-five yards.

Breadth of the body of the church thirteen yards and a half.

Breadth of the north aifle fix yards.

Breadth of the fouth aifle fix yards.

THERE are in the faid church on the fouth fide ten arches, between each column five yards, the fpan of each of the faid ten arches.

THERE are alfo in the lower part of the faid church, on the fouth fide ten windows of great length, alfo in the overhiftoire (i. e. upper ftory) are ten windows of like workmanfhip: and ten principal windows in the north part of the church, and every window contains two great glazed pannels.

ALSO in the overhiftoyre are likewise ten principal windows, and every window contains two pannels, each glazed according to its proportion, although not according to the quantity of the windows of the whole church of Westminster, near London.

THE breadth of the east window before the great altar, contains eight glazed pannels with the arms of the founder, Roger Bygot.

AND in the east part of the two east aisles, in their two windows, each window consists of three glazed pannels without arms.

ALSO the length of the choir consists of four arches, besides the square area of the chief bell tower, in the middle of the choir, which contains ——— yards.

So that the whole length of the choir, with the area of the bell tower contains ——— yards.

ITEM, the height of the vault of the whole church from its area contains eleven English vetheymys (fathoms), and every fathom consists of ——— feet or ——— yards.

THE length of the cross isle, that is the arms of the church both north and south taken together, contains fifty yards, that is one hundred and fifty feet.

ITEM, the square space or area of the bell tower, situated in the middle of the choir, contains in length twelve yards.

ITEM, the said square of the bell tower contains in breadth twelve yards.

ITEM, the principal south and north glass windows, contain six glazed pannels of great height.

MEMORANDUM, the cloister is thirty-seven yards in length and in breadth thirty-three yards.

ITEM, the whole church contains fourteen arches in one part, and fourteen in the other part.

ITEM, the principal north window fourteen glazed pannels.

ITEM, the breadth of the said windows, as well on the north as the opposite window on the south, contains three yards.

ITEM, the fermarye (infirmery) contains sixty of my steps, which are thirty-four yards, and in breadth eight yards.

ITEM, the chapter house contains in length eighteen yards, in breadth nine yards.

Tintern Abbey, Monmouthshire. Pl. 2.

Pub. by G. & J. H. 1844. By J. G. H.

From the above account, if the author has not misreckoned, it seems evident that the gate wall window has been altered from the wrong the description, though perhaps he may have been as inaccurate in that article, as in the estimation of his Steppy's, when he says 24 of them make 12 yards, and 40 yards make only 85 of his paces or steps. His description nevertheless seems to give some idea of the position of the ancient hall, &c. of which we have no other information.

THE

MEMORANDUM, that 24 of my steps or paces make 12 yards : also 50 yards make 85 of my paces or steps.

FROM the above account, if the author has not misreckoned, it seems evident that the great east window has been altered since he wrote the description, though perhaps he may have been as inaccurate in that article, as in the estimation of his steppey's, when he says 24 of them make 12 yards, and 50 yards make only 85 of his paces or steps. His description nevertheless serves to give some idea of the proportions of the different buildings of which we have no other information.

A PLAN of this church is given in vol. 2. of Stevens's Monasticon. This view was drawn anno 1773.

(P L A T E II.)

THIS view, which was taken (in 1775) from the N. side of the river Wye, near the ferry, shews the situation of the abbey, both with respect to that river and the woody mountains with which it is surrounded and overshadowed : a more beautiful scene, or one more fitted for contemplation, cannot be found or even conceived. In the former plate of this monastery it was said nothing but the church remained ; a second visit to that ruin has convinced the author this assertion was too general ; the small gate, leading from the water here shewn, seems to have belonged to the abbey ; and at a little distance to the south-west are several cottages, evidently once part of its out-offices, though so disguised and patched as to escape a cursory observer. Adjoining thereto is also a considerable length of its ancient wall. The inside of this monastery affords a fine specimen of that stile of architecture called Gothic ; its rich west window, still quite entire, is much admired, though perhaps somewhat defective in point of proportion, being rather too broad for its height. The small door beneath it is extremely poor : the intent of the architect is manifest ; he meant by its contrast with the loftiness of the roof to strike the beholders.

THE

THE fragments of its once sculptured roof, and other remains of its fallen decorations, are piled up with more regularity than taste, on each side the grand aisle: they are worthy observation; several of them both for invention and execution would do honour to the best artist of the present age. There are also some mutilated figures formerly belonging to monuments, particularly the head of a monk; and the figure of a knight armed in a coat of mail, his shield on his left arm, is said to represent one of the Strongbowes, earl of Pembroke. It is broken off just above the knees; the legs are wanting. The right-hand, which is shewn, has five fingers and a thumb. Whether this was a natural peculiarity of the person represented, or the mistake of the artist, is uncertain. On the whole, though this monastery is undoubtedly light and elegant, it wants that gloomy solemnity so essential to religious ruins; those yawning vaults and dreary recesses which strike the beholder with a religious awe, and make him almost shudder at entering them, calling into his mind all the tales of the nursery.

HERE, at one cast of the eye, the whole is comprehended, nothing being left for the spectator to guess or explore; and this defect is increased by the ill-placed neatness of the poor people who shew the building; by whose absurd labour the ground is covered over with a turf as even and trim as that of a bowling-green, which gives the building more the air of an artificial ruin in a garden, than that of an ancient decayed abbey. How unlike the beautiful description of the poet!

Half buried there lie many a broken bust,
And obelisk and urn o'erthrown by time;
And many a cherub here descends in dust
From the rent roof and portico sublime.

Where rev'rend shrines in Gothic grandeur stood,
The nettle, or the noxious night-shade spreads;
And ashlings, wafted from the neighb'ring wood,
Through the worn turrets wave their trembling heads.

Elegy on a pile of ruins, by J. CUNNINGHAM.

THE END OF THE THIRD VOLUME.

For list of plates see at end of v. 2.

HILL
REFERENCE LIBRARY
ST. PAUL

SPECIAL 84-B
21595
V.3

THE J. PAUL GETTY CENTER
LIBRARY

